January 2015

EDITORIAL

Happy new year, sexy Toikesters. Thank you to all of you who came out to make Godiva Week awesome, and here's to a deplorable new semester.

If you're anything like me, you spent the holiday passed out in an empty bathtub with a fistful of scotch. So, we've dedicated a whole issue to getting your sexy right for 2015. This too-hot-for-TV edition is full to bursting with sensual advice, hot news items, and suggestive material not suited for minors.

We've skirted EngSoc bylaws and national labour laws, again, to bring you this level of debauchery, so we hope you enjoy it!

Before I leave you to rest of this issue though, I would like to take a moment to note the losses felt by members of the Toike in the last few weeks.

A man named Laurent Noonan gave a lot to the Toike more than a gauze draped over your own pulsing terror. Every creative act is open war against The Way It Is. What you are saying when you make something is that the universe is not sufficient, and what it really needs is more you. And it does, actually; it does. Go look outside. You can't tell me that we are done making the world."

Happy new year,

Colin Parker
Editor-in-Chief

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Dear Editor,

Long time reader, first time writer. I followed your moisturizing advice in the last issue, but I'm having a lot of trouble getting hummus out of some of my more... private areas. Do you have any tips?

-Mack

Dear Mack,

Believe it or not, this happens all the time. Just head down to your nearest grocery store and pick up some flatbread; even invite some friends over for a party dip!

Colin

Dear Editor,

I don't know who this email will get to, but I need help. Someone is trying to kill me. Please, send the police to the Brampton community centre. I don't know how long I have until they find me.

-Simon

Dear Simon,

Man, these email scams get more and more elaborate. Listen, buddy, I don't want to buy any more waffle irons, and I'm not falling for any more Swiss bank account scams. I'm investing my money under my mattress from now on.

Dear Editor,

Your relationship advice has been too useful, and now I'm literally swimming in guys. This is the most disgusting thing I've ever been subjected to.

Please help! How do I get rid of all these guys?

-J.

Dear J,

Have you tried transferring out of engineering?

WHAT HO?

Toikes are publications, usually periodical publications, that are printed or published electronically. (The online versions are called online Toikes.) They are generally published on a regular schedule and contain a variety of content. They are generally financed by advertising, by a drug mule, by high-velocity extortion, or a combination of the three.

'Murican Eagle Coming to Eaton Centre

Advertisements boast "land of the 25%-off"

Toike Oike Americorrespondent

The Eaton center has announced that a popular clothing store will be opening its doors to the Canadian public for the first time this month.

'Murican Eagle is known in the United States for its wide, patriotic selection of off-brand fashion. The shop promises to bring "a little taste of the states" to the Canadian consumers, which it claims is "totally a different culture". Customers can expect a rich atmosphere of freedom, economic tumult and racial tension.

Despite the franchise's move from the mid-western United States, 'Murican Eagle will offer a considerable winter line-up, including confederate flag wool blankets, fluffy wife beaters, and XXXL snuggles. It also boasts personal scooters in place of shopping carts, in order to better serve its customers and their asses.

"We're all about comfort," said the manager of the new location, "and if my rear isn't happy, I'm not happy."

The Eaton center reportedly struggled to adopt this American franchise due to clashes in food

'Murican Eagle's advertisements were well-received in theatres, and are expected to come out on DVD by the end of February.

court contract agreements. The mall has already promised the food establishments complete monopoly, but 'Murican Eagle would not comply without its built-in KFC.

"Customers should be able to indulge in herbs and spices whenever they please," said Eagle CEO Gus Murray. "It's core to our mission statement."

After months of negotiation, the store location was moved to the food court, which both sides find to be a natural solution.

The 'Murican Eagle franchise has recently declared a "war on high prices", which they expect to inject funds into their economy. Employees of the store now regularly plunder neighboring shops, sometimes even going to the opposite end of their malls in the name of thrift and the customer's best interest.

Critics have expressed concern over the series of shootings that have ocured in Eagle locations nationwide, but the company encourages people to come to the "Ruler of the Free Malls" and browse without worry. Each purchase comes with a travel-size firearm, which is available in a variety of colours and styles.

Of course, any injuries sustained in the store are still covered by Canadian healthcare.

New Taco Bell 'Quasar-ito' Unveiled

Gravity well devastates west coast

Olly Swell

Toike Oike Gastronomist

Taco Bell's latest menu item has stirred some controversy south of the border. While some customers are calling the "Quasar-ito" a delicious addition to the fast-food restaurant's value menu, millions of others have been killed or driven from their homes by its unprecedented size and tanginess.

Despite outcries from nutritional, scientific, and military groups across the planet, Taco Bell deployed the first Quasar-ito in a small town in the state formerly known as California. Survivors have been evacuated from the spicy blast radius, but relief zones throughout the mid-west are in dire need of provisions and toiletries.

Initial projections of the controversial menu item appeared on Taco Bell's Twitter feed early this week, inciting a heated online response. Scientific authorities were concerned by the radiological and topographical surveys of the product's surface included in the report, as well as its purported 700 kilometer diameter.

"The Quasar-ito has been in the works for over a decade," said Taco Bell representative Mort Dimsey, "but only recently have technology and the intestinal fortitude of the average consumer caught up to our ambitions."

Taco Bell seemed eager to capitalize on the mixed reception of the Quasar-ito. Facebook followers may now enter to win a 1/1000000 scale model of the California Quasar-ito by submitting a picture of their relief housing by January 26.

The second Quasar-ito is expected to drop within the next three weeks. If you notice the scent of day-old lettuce or stale taco shell, the FDA recommends sitting down, making peace with your loved ones, and praying for the savoury release of death.

Snitches Get Bitches

Police inducing public cooperation by rewarding informants with prostitutes

Dinobot
Toike Oike Kvetches Expert

Violent homicides, break-ins, and gang related crimes in low-income neighbourhoods often go unreported even by the victims due to the popular anti-cooperation catchphrase, “Snitches get stitches,” but one Toronto Police division is looking to fight fire with fire with the equally catchy “Snitches get bitches”.

“One hundred percent of the reason ‘Snitches get stitches’ is so effective is because it rhymes,” explained Division 26 coordinator David Kowalski. “Something like ‘Don’t talk to the cops we’ll hurt you’ or ‘Providing details for police investigations only endangers yourself would never have caught on.”

The program began 3 weeks ago, and while rewarding both male and female informants with prostitutes and sexual favors initially raised many moral criticisms, they quickly evaporated once the boost in police cooperation increased the solve and arrest rate by a whopping 300%.

“Before this program, we had people walking down the street casually firing their guns in the air, knife fights in the middle of intersections – one guy was even playing a concert and got mugged on stage. Of the nearly 500 witness interviews we conducted last month alone, mostly with attendees of that concert, not one of them claimed to have seen anything.”

Last year’s drug addict recovery program “twitches get riches” was not as successful as current efforts.

Police are now overwhelmed with the number of tips and witnesses volunteering their time, and have so far made hundreds of arrests and convictions for crimes stretching back up to 4 years. Police actually had to add a clause to the program last week to prevent people from reporting themselves for rewards, as loitering and littering briefly spiked.

In response to this effective program, local gangs have returned fire with the counter-phrased “bitches get stitches”, threatening all prostitutes working with the police. Police shot back with a “bitches get riches” slogan, offering hefty rewards and protective identities to all cooperative escorts from the recent boost in funding from asset seizures. Gangs responded with “riches get ditches” encouraging gangs to bury their assets to avoid police seizure, to which police countered with “ditches get snitches” offering rewards to all citizens with tips on buried gang assets. “Bitches get pitches” has recently been introduced by gangs, offering free baseball lessons to all prostitutes in an effort to convince them to quit the profession and stop helping the police. However, the police’s new “pitches get switches” initiative has completely flooded the amateur baseball scene with switch hitters, frustrating new pitchers into quitting. New Study Finds Average Toike Oike Writer Fluent In 0.37 Languages

According to a recent in-house survey, the average contributor to the Toike Oike can fully read, write and comprehend approximately 0.37 languages. The survey, which specifically noted the writer of this news brief as “definitely included in the results”, has come as somewhat of a surprise to Toike staff.

“I speak four languages fluently,” said Toike senior staff writer, before shooting a knowing glance toward the rest of the staff. “How is a number that low even possible?”

At time of writing, this author things the survayors were full of shit. Toike writers can definitely spell things fine.

I mean, maybe they counted the animals we keep in EngCom sometimes? Even the cows probably speak a language. Cow language, at least.

It’s really not cool for the surveyors to be so intolerant of animals. We shouldn’t listen to what they have to say, because Toike writers can definitely do good writing.

Local Friendship Ruined by Flaccid Fistbump

Catastrophe struck last Tuesday for local best friends Omar McGroarty and Johnny Parker following an exceptionally witty comment by Omar. The two decided to celebrate the comment with a fistbump; however, when their fists connected, the miniscule force caused Johnny’s wrist to collapse.

Shortly after the moment of impact, the two spent an uncomfortable period of time avoiding direct eye contact.

“Yeah, we used to get along real well,” said McGroarty in an exclusive interview, “but after that fistbump... man, I couldn’t do it anymore. It’s just too awkward to deal with.”

The incident has taken its toll on the University of Toronto community, with at least a dozen people confused by the former friends’ behaviour. Further, tutorial seating arrangements have been slightly upset in the wake of the flopped fistbump. Parker has since taken medical leave until his condition improves.

Experts are skeptical that McGroarty and Parker’s friendship can ever recover, and recommend that everyone else take this as an opportunity to switch to handshakes, hugs, or good old-fashioned nuzzling.

Sex Ed Added to Engineering Curriculum

Faculty cites need for more theoretical learning

Mike Literus
Toike Oike Sexpert

The Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering will be adding sexual education courses to the first year curriculum in all undergraduate programs this coming year. First year curriculum officials say the change should provide engineering students with a firm theoretical grounding in the subject.

“The subject matter may not be directly relevant to the undergraduates, but it may apply after graduation. As long as they aren’t in research. Or the software sector, I guess. I mean, okay, it’s not going to make a difference in most industry jobs.”

There is some suggestion that the new subject matter is geared more toward students who transfer out of the faculty, to prevent them from being at a disadvantage in different areas of study. Others speculate that the aim is to reduce the size of the engineering class by giving them some idea of what they are missing.

Originally, the faculty had intended to add sex ed material to the first year Engineering

Strategies and Practice course, as this might increase attendance at lectures. Instead, the course will be its own, with two hours of lecture per week. For engineering science students, there will be a second year course which combines sex ed with vector calculus, in order to provide additional theory enrichment. There will be no lab component in either course.

Publishers Launch Ships to Combat Textbook Piracy

Kanye Lingis
Toike Oike Torrent-Tracker

University students have been fighting against the rising prices of textbooks for decades. From the “library method”, to Scott Markus’s Share Algorithm (developed during a particularly boring chemistry lecture), students have developed a wide array of surreptitious means to evade textbook ripoffs.

With the emergence of online piracy, the publishers at Mustard House have developed a revolutionary countermeasure to ensure that students double their tuition with textbook and chiropractic care.

Three ships, all sailboats, aim to travel to a shore in the Caribbean, where the publishers claim the textbook pirates are located.

“We’ve been working on this scheme for a few years now,” said representative Owen Wa. “Now, we’re finally ready to open our sails and set a course toward the Pirate Bay.”

While this has been well received by a side-split student community, administrators of the University of Toronto have been critical of this approach.

“This kind of Hollywood-glorified piracy simply doesn’t exist,” said Vice Dean of Incidental Fees Joseph Price. “If publishers want to stop textbook piracy, they need to take a more student-centred approach.”

Price explained that the University talks to students regularly about their concerns with textbook prices, and has developed a number of strategies for resolving the situation.

“The best way to respond to students is by being proactive. I always recommend that publishers release a new edition of textbooks every year, at least. You never know when people are going to learn new ways to integrate functions.”

“We try to do our part too,” said one calculus professor. “I only assign homework from the newest edition of the textbook, and I always make sure to take one from that account-bound CD that comes taped to the book. The worst kind of piracy occurs between students, where some of them actually exchange money for each other’s textbooks.”

Until the sailboats arrive in the Carribean, it is difficult to predict if the publisher’s plan will be successful or not. We at the Toike Oike attempted to interview a real-life textbook pirate, but our news truck was subsequently plundered and our cameraman was taken to join the pirate crew.

Scientists Solve Oil Crisis by Cloning Dinosaurs

Vonnegut
Toike Oike Doppelganger

A group of biologists have developed an advanced process which may make oil shortages a thing of the past. The Toike interviews the head of this project, Dr. Mick Hammond.

Toike: Good afternoon Professor Hammond. You claim to have found a solution to the worldwide oil crisis. Could you explain what that is?

Dr. Hammond: Dinosaurs, my dear boy; dinosaurs are the answer! We’ve found a way to clone the prehistoric beasts!

Toike: Wow, that’s pretty rad. I’m not sure I see the practical application, though.

Dr. Hammond: Allow me to explain: we grow the dinosaurs, wait until they die, and then compress them into precious fossil fuel. And this all happens at our state of the art facility: Mesozoic Park.

Toike: I don’t understand. Why not just focus on renewable energy rather than decimating dinosaurs?

Dr. Hammond: As a species, humans have never been good at the whole “pacifism” deal. I’m not sure people would even drive cars if it didn’t involve constantly exploding dinosaur corpses. My team of scientists found that the best way to encourage people to choose renewable solutions was to hand them a rifle so they can hunt for a few barrels themselves.

Toike: So you’re just going let the dinosaurs loose among humans? That sounds familiar, and awesome. How much energy do the dinosaurs produce?

Dr. Hammond: According to our calculations, a herd of 600 brontosauruses could produce about 5 kg of fuel.

Toike: That doesn’t sound very efficient. That’s the size of a large turkey.

Dr. Hammond: A turkey? Okay, try to imagine yourself in the late 1800’s. You get your first look at this “large turkey” as you enter an oil rig. It flows like a river, bobbing along. You think this is just a small well, but you light the spout and it keeps on burning. Suddenly, kaboom! Now there are refineries all around you and before you know it cars, generators, airplanes, red pand–

Toike: That does sound promising, but most of the fossil fuels today come from ancient vegetation, not dinosaurs. Why not plant some trees and let consumers cut them down instead? Isn’t that safer?

Dr. Hammond: Huh. That’s not a bad solution. Unfortunately, we already turned on the dinosaur cloning machine, and it’s reliably powered by only the purest veloceraptors. There’s no turning it off now.

Toike: I see... Thank you for speaking with us, professor.

- It’s that time of year again, when the busy holidays and frigid cold weather can deaden the bedroom. So, here’s the Toike staff’s top 5 tips to stoke the dying fire of your libido.
- Poonshine
Ladies, want your significant other to go down on you more often? Take a lesson from the ancient Greeks, who knew that wine is a potent aphrodisiac. Your ladyparts are a breeding ground for yeast, so why not put some sugar and crushed grapes up there and let nature take its course? When sexytimes come, he’ll be thirsting for your sweet, intoxicating vintage. Dionysus would approve.
- Rhyme Time
Nothing is sexier than intelligence. To get your lover in the mood, show your literary skills and use some rhyming phrases like “humpus in the rumpus”, “boopity, boppity, give me the schloppity”, “jam in the clam”, “pearls for these girls”, or the age old classic “sticky in the icky”. Better yet, write some yourself.
- Are We There Yet?
If you’re ever bored during sex, try playing some tried and true road trip classics like 20 Questions or I Spy. The hours will fly and you’ll hear your partner’s grunting and/or moaning in no time. Or better yet, just set out on a road trip to get you really revved up. With good planning, it’s easy enough to get in the car and set off on your journey, all while you’re going at it.
Remember to stay safe though – condoms and seat belts on at all times.
- Whet the Appetite
Fun with food in the bedroom doesn’t have to stop at orgasm. Spice up your post-coital conversation with some appetizing and adorable nicknames.

Sexing It Up for 2015

- Are you trying to increase your sex appeal this year, but find the gym a little too tiring? Look no further! We’ve collected some of the hottest tips for raising your grade of meat.
- Make fun of all the people working out in January
Losers. They think going to the gym will burn off all of the food-based regret of the past year. You’ll turn others on by accepting the real, out-of-shape you and moving on. Acceptance is one of the sexiest qualities, second only to denial.
- Keep drinking
Nothing stings like the realization that you got totally hammered last night, so why slow down to think about it? Just keep on drinking and ignore the fact that your life is a complete shipwreck.
- Keep complaining about your ex
Yeah, that girl who left you when you needed her the most was totally a bitch. You should probably let everyone know, otherwise she might make them think you’re an obnoxious person.
- Definitely ask that frosh out again
- Get drunk again and impress your crush with a BAC level of above 0.12. You probably won’t get rejected; after all, that already happened, so what are the odds?
- Wear extensive, full body makeup
If you want to have that unique appeal of the lady on this issue’s cover or the blue man group, it’s critical to apply full body makeup before you go anywhere in public. It’s like Photoshopping yourself in real life.
- Don’t think about sex
The key to lasting longer in bed and satisfying your significant other is completely ignoring them. Next time you’re doing the deed, just think of how delicious your grandma’s turkey was in Christmas. That’ll keep you from finishing early.
- Accept the real you
There’s nothing wrong with the fact that you’ll never be as sexy as our model in the cover (or even come close to that), or marry a hot rich person from another country, or have rock-hard abs. You have a lot of qualities which would be valuable in certain cultures, so go out there and be the best you you can be, and the second best you someone else could!

Engineering Diet Tips

Fitting back into those Monday sweats

- Steven Seagull
Toike Oike Vending Machine Stocker
- With the New Year come and gone, many of us will be resolving to shed some weight gained over the holidays. Among the latest trends in dieting is an intense regimen called the “engineering diet”. You’ll be impressed by how fast you shed those extra pounds with these four exercises!
- Five assignments, three midterms
The brain is one of your most active organs, so with a series of punishing mental challenges you can exercise your mind and body at the same time. With just one week of this routine, you will have nowhere to go but up!
- Alcoholic beverages
The best hangover cure is also a miracle detox agent. Not only does it distract you from hunger, it’s also a great way to trigger emesis, a natural process that prevents your body from absorbing fat, carbs, or nutrients. Note, experts disagree on some
- details about alcohol intake, owing to all of their test subjects being sloshed at all hours of the day.
- Sleep deprivation
The longer you’re awake struggling with your assignments and midterm studying, the longer you’re burning energy. Do not slack and hit the hay. Sleeping in is even worse – your weight might bounce right back.
Remember, if you can feel your body becoming a vacant husk, the routine is working.
- Crying (optional)
If you’re really serious about your dieting, crying is a time-tested way to purge toxins and feelings of anxiety and helplessness. If you find it is not as effective as you would like, combine with the fetal position or lying in a puddle of vomit.
- The engineering diet follows a basic 4:2:1 ratio of drinks to assignments to hours of sleep. Get ready to burn some fat, and if you need a spotter just find another dead-eyed university student. It should not be difficult to find one.

Professor Fabricates Results of Thought Experiment

Academic offence charges and suspension in effect

- Olly Swell
Toike Oike Offensive Correspondent
- Students in Professor Calden’s quantum physics course were shocked last week when he shared a fraudulent document to the University of Toronto’s Blackboard website. The offending document consists of a three page report on the topography of an “impossible” cube. After a short introduction on relevant concepts to the experiment, it proceeds to make a series of bold claims about the object with little substantiation. “We received a number of complaints about the experiment,” said Vice-Dean of Academic Retribution Milo Richards, “but
- we didn’t get suspicious until we noticed that most of the citations came from Wikipedia.” The University has since launched an investigation into the professor’s activities, during which he will not be allowed to teach normal classes or conduct research. Sources report that Professor Calden did not book any laboratory space between the time that he proposed this experiment and the report’s release. “I was just trying to clear some things up for my students,” said Professor Calden. “I’m just so confused. Please, this is my livelihood.” Calden’s colleagues declined comment on his current status,

- but were willing to comment that the results of his experiment seem implausible. “It’s just disappointing to hear,” said an anonymous faculty member who claims to have known Calden. “I mean, the report wasn’t even in IEEE format.” Students of Professor Calden’s courses have been asked to keep up with readings until a replacement instructor is found. Some of them have actually done so, and reportedly noticed similarities between his lecture content and the course textbook. Whether he plagiarized from the text is a matter of speculation at this time, but it may contribute to the case against the professor.
