

ADVENTURE TOI KE

EDITORIAL

You find yourself in a room. The floor is dusty, and the walls are made of stone brick. You can smell death and mystery in the air. There's even a skeleton on the wall to your left. Looks like he had a bad time. Exits are north and south.

The south exit looks pretty rough though. I mean, I wouldn't choose that one if I were you. Oh, it's also super dark in the room. Shit, I guess that means you can't see the skeleton and the exits. Uhm, let me start over.

So you're in this room. Or it's more of a hallway I guess. It's scary as balls, and no you don't know how you got there. Alesha said she knew where she was going and you listened like a dumbass, and where did it get you? Skeleton Town, population you and a bleached white skeleton.

This is how your epic adventure begins, like most Saturday mornings for me. Your inventory includes a bottle of Jaegermeister, a sort of crummy wooden sword, and regret.

That's right; we at the Toike are accustomed to a world of high-flying adventure and waking up in weird sex dungeons, so we've decided to share that experience with you. Let's get intimate.

Welcome to the Adventure Toike.

On a less metaphorical note, I would like to extend an apology to members of our audience who were hurt by content in our previous issue. It is the Toike's job to support Skule spirit by entertaining our readers and sparking discussion, but my poor judgement betrayed that purpose and let a fire spread last month.

If you have concerns with campus organizations like the Toike, I encourage you to let them know. Whether you have a funny idea to pitch or serious criticism to level, we always have an open door.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Dear Colin,

Stop taking my goddamn name off the masthead

Sincerely,
Your bitter old graphics editor

Dear Your bitter old graphic editor,

You know what, maybe there's a reason you're not on there all the time. Did you ever think of that? Maybe it's not that I forget a lot of things I should be doing all the time.

Maybe it's because you're listed as Head Graphics Duo sometimes and that's how the math shakes out. Maybe it's a mistake at the printer. Maybe you're dead to me. I dunno.

The point is that you should really reconsider your resignation. Please, I've got 5000+ mouths to feed.

Love,
Colin

Dear Editor,

This letter has been sent to inform you that your membership in the Alternative Live Action Role Playing Society of Canada, or ALARPCBFRSDJ, has been rescinded following the incident taking place last Friday where you pinned another registered member to a tree with a real sword, yelling "Mercy is for Trogheims." While we normally support creative expression, we think that yours would be better channeled through blacksmithing or a life sentence in prison.

Dear Tom,

A win is a win. Send my regards to the Trogheims.

The Toike Oike is randomly generated every month using the world's most advanced supercomputer. After processing the latest tabloids and four fingers of malt whiskey, it composes empirically funny and impartial satire at 30 Gigglebytes per second. The Toike Oike staff then painstakingly pens every issue under its cold and unyielding gaze.

WHAT HO?

A Toike Oike is an exciting or unusual experience. It may also be a bold, usually risky undertaking, with an uncertain outcome. The term also broadly refers to any enterprise that is potentially fraught with physical, financial or psychological risk, such as a shotgun wedding, or other major life undertakings.

Nintendo Releases 4DS

Angus Aggie
Toike Oike Robo-Correspondent

Nintendo has just released the newest member of the DS family. Being the successor to the DS, 2DS, and 3DS, the 4DS aims to further expand the dimensions of gaming.

In order to replicate the unique 4D experience, Nintendo's engineers have implemented numerous advancements over the current 3DS technology, including dual industrial-sized fans, a peripheral hose for water effects, and even an attached Febreze™ canister.

The true standout to the system, however, is the "Vitality Reaction System" (VRS), which provides real time feedback for players by releasing electric shocks, up to 1000 volts, when characters take damage. Due to positive responses from focus groups, Nintendo has no plans to release the system without the innovative VRS.

The 4DS launched with some standout games, including "Nintendogs 4 Real", "Super Mario's Sewer Adventure", and "Super Smash Brothers: Pain Gain". The newest in the Nintendogs series utilizes the 4DS's capabilities to expose the disgusting truth behind owning an puppy with no training whatsoever. Super Mario's Sewer Adventure, on the other hand is defining immersive experience which could only be replicated by getting lost in a real sewer.

The 4DS's marketing notes that users should exercise caution if they have epilepsy, or have ever met someone with epilepsy.

The system itself sold out when it launched, with fans lining days in advance. Many critics cited that the immersive capabilities of the system and games were simply too much to miss out on. One customer even bought his ninety-five grandfather a system, noting that the new Smash Brothers is "a great replacement for a pacemaker".

The system retails at $469, with an optional heart failure insurance option for the VRS. Do not be surprised if stocks are empty if you go to purchase it. If that is the case, just wait for the next iteration of the technology, which ought to come before they can get more on shelves.

With the 4DS, Nintendo has shown the world its innovative thinking, and, yet another temporary solution to human boredom.

Career Centre to Offer PeyTSD Program

Vinnie Briey
Toike Oike Briefs Counsellor

The University of Toronto's Career Centre has announced a new experimental rehabilitation program for students returning from their PEY years. The program is the first of its kind in North America, and will be designed to rehabilitate students to the casual fuckery of university, which can be a shock to students who have acclimatized to the professional world. The program will include workshops on binge drinking, sleeping in common rooms, procrastination, and downward spirals.

The University's bold move has come in response to several instances on campus of students having mental breakdowns while staring at the nutritional information on instant ramen bowls, during lectures about proof-of-concept mathematics which are inapplicable outside of the classroom, and in mandatory 7PM tutorials. Mental health officials have dubbed it "PeyTSD Syndrome", and are frantically trying to determine the best treatment for the condition.

We spoke to returning 4th year student James Galowski about his experiences as part of the PEY program. He described his placement as "fairly decent, once I completed the WHMIS and OSHA courses for the 5th time. Unlike the ones I took at UofT, these actually came with a certificate of completion, so I hope I won't have to do them again the next time a prof decides we should work with hydrochloric acid."

One student refused to elaborate on his experience at his placement, muttering only "1,346 cups of coffee, 3752 Tims runs" on an endless, tortured loop.

The University of Toronto's announcement comes just days after the Career Centre revealed the new Pregnancy Experience Year, which will allow couples to take 12 to 16 months to gestate, birth and raise their own biological children 9 months after that one crazy Nuit Blanche. The program is intended to provide engineers with a more hands-on understanding of how parenthood is also a full-time job.

While there has been no shortage of desperate volunteers for the copulation workshops, overall enrolment has been fairly low. Many relationships in engineering still carry the same stigma as winning the lottery, spotting Bigfoot, or actually getting a good PEY placement.

Electrician Arrested on Battery Charges

Mike Literus
Toike Oike ECE

Gus Adams, a local electrician, has been arrested on charges of battery and assault. As the story travels around the news circuit, parts of it have become somewhat muddled, and different newspapers have produced a series of parallel versions of the event. The Toike Oike has undertaken a full investigation to fuse together the details.

A witness of the attack says she saw an argument going on between two people who both seemed "pretty wired", and then one of them made a switch from verbal aggression to physical. At the current moment, the assailant is being held in custody, awaiting trial. Friends of the perpetrator say they are shocked by his behaviour, and claim that Adams was never known for having a short temper.

Adams' superiors had recently decided to induct him into the electrician's hall of fame, but have now reversed the decision after finding out he is a breaker (of the law). The assailant's lawyer says she intends to put up some serious resistance to the prosecution, and that she hopes to have Adams discharged from custody very soon.

Time Inversely Correlated With Effort

New study finds that as time approaches 0, effort approaches infinity

Selena Bieber
Toike Oike Insert Title Here

Toronto, ON — Groundbreaking research is being conducted right now to determine if a relationship exists between how much time is left until a deadline and the amount of effort going into the task at hand. With 40 minutes remaining on the cock (typo on purpose), panic has not yet ensued. Using carefully devised algorithms, it is estimated that 17 minutes can be allocated to procrastination without significantly impacting the quality of this article (st. dev. +/- 2min). Well, since I've already written down the very large number of 103 words, I can now take a well-deserved break.

While editing can be a valuable element in the writing process, the actual writing itself is what's most important. Therefore, if you have time for only one of the two, writing is strongly encouraged over editing (1). Scientists believe that this may be sourced to the widespread preference of drawing a blank from squiggly lines versus an actual blank page. Furthermore, ongoing research has also determined that desperate puns are common finds in under-pressure writing. Deep analysis surfaced that these serve to encourage a half-assed smile from the audience as well as some sympathy (please, I'm not even getting paid to write this shit).

Studies have also now shown at the threshold for panic resides at precisely 13 minutes before the deadline. Experts are not entirely sure if this is due to the superstition that 13 is an unlucky number or if it has something to do with the number 3 which is part of the number 13. It is important to mention that there are three letters in the first three letters of the number three. This previous sentence contained the word "three" thrice, confirming the illuminati involvement.

To end on a formal note, submitting a project, task, or article before the deadline shows initiative in that the subject likely started their assignment early, which allowed them to be able to offer their work early. Even if you aren't done last paragraph, heck, even your last sentence, your superior will be much more

At Least We Have the Leafs

Toike writers give thanks that they have something left to make fun of

Vonnegut
Toike Oike Thanksgiver

In an increasingly global society the line between the taboo and tolerable in media has become blurred. In a time where everything is sacred and being politically incorrect is met with force, at least one subject remains free game for journalists and public: the Toronto Maple Leafs.

You cannot issue criticisms against North Korea or risk provoking all-out war. The Supreme Leader tends to get pretty sensitive about these things, so keeping things civil is a priority. Big information companies like Sony can be similarly testy, so shutting up is a great idea unless you want your personal information leaked on a regular basis.

So no ISIS jokes allowed, not even Putin is risking that. Putin is not a soft target though; mess with him and he'll pay a visit to your home with a few of his goons. He will hold a vote for "Who owns this house" and spoiler alert: you lose the referendum by 90%.

We beat them in the World Juniors though, and Canada's PM was in attendance. I can't harp on Harper because this author is a Macedonian Raptors fan and Harper support both, so call it bias.

It is futile to crack a zinger about Obama, the man has seen it all and probably does not care. He will either create a law outlawing your humour or cart you off to Guantanamo Bay.

In fact, all of America is off limits. What a mess that is, with civilians killing cops and cops killing civilians.

But the lowly Leafs remain our loyal punching bags, and even encourage it with their antics. When the team did not salute their fans the press and public bit into them like ravenous wolves. Back in Russia, the metaphor gets a lot more literal.

Tabloids and sports sections salivated over the firing of the Leafs head coach midway through the season, with a chance to project a "the ship is sinking and on fire" narrative. Try to give China the same attitude and see how far you get. Bareknuckle censorship is a journalistic specialty over there, and there are no Internet message boayou will find no Internet message boards for people to support you in impotent rage.

This is where a joke about Boko-Haram and their cowardice comes in, but no matter how satirical or well executed it might have been, there will still be a group of people taking offense.

There are no limits to Leaf bashing, but it's because people want positive change out of the team. So, as we can only mock the Leafs these days, perhaps they will finally improve.

Or not.

Bar Fights Plummet with Temperature

In an impressive piece of independent research, University of Toronto graduate students have released a paper showing that inclement weather has a drastic effect of reducing pub skirmishes. The research suggests that not only are customers more content to nurse their drinks than pick fights, but it is also literally too cold to take it outside.

Vaccine Vaccines Gain Traction

Concerns about the contents and potential hazards of vaccines have grown over the last several years. Today, many parents are opting against the ostensibly dangerous procedure, accepting the risks of countless diseases.

However, some scientists suggest that additional steps may be necessary to protect children. Gavin O'Donney of the World Health Organization explains:

"I think the scientific and medical communities have come to the conclusion that the benefits of vaccines are far outweighed by their risks. So, as a parent, it's important to take precautions so that your child doesn't come into contact with vaccinations, or indeed anyone who has been vaccinated, and the best way to do that is to vaccinate them against it."

Pharmaceutical manufacturers have been grinding up measles vaccines for the past few months to satisfy demand for measles vaccine vaccines. In theory, they will allow the body's defensive systems to strengthen themselves by fighting weakened vaccine particles.

"I'm so thankful that we've been able to get Tommy vaccine vaccinated," said a local father. "I've never felt safer knowing that my boy will be protected from trace mercury content and thousands of shards of razor-sharp glass.

POINT/COUNTERPOINT

Raising Children vs Raising Children as Livestock

Children are the paragon of adorable cuteness, bringing sunny, innocent joy into our lives. As the adage goes, kids represent the budding hope of a promising, brighter future.

Raising a child is a time when we reflect on ourselves. People often say that parenthood changes their perspective on life and makes them develop the unconditional love we associate with family.

Have some children today. It'll change your world for the better.

Children should be treated as cherished property. If treated well, your valuable spawn can provide financial security for the rest of your life.

Their flesh is tender and nutritious, fetching high prices at market. Their fine-grained, flawless skin is prized as a leather. Some of the older, stronger ones can even do manual labour and support you with supplementary income. What's not to love about rearing children as livestock? Plant the seeds this year and enjoy cruising through the rest of your life.

Op-Ed: No Womb for Designer Babies

Olly Swell
Toike Oike Baby Maker

As research into generic modification continues, many couples have expressed their interest in designing perfect, custom-order children in the womb. Trials have already begun on laboratory animals and, frankly, I think that this is a deplorable idea.

We as a species have enjoyed natural births for thousands of years, and we ought not trifle with processes we barely understand. As someone expecting a child myself, I just have to have faith that bundle of joy will be born with a clean bill of health, a strong jaw, and well-oiled Abrams tank treads.

Will I be disappointed if the pitter-patter will soon fill my home isn't accompanied by the steady grinding of gears? Will that make this child any less of a miracle in my eyes? Of course it will, but that doesn't mean that they won't be endearing in their own way.

When you hand your offspring off on their eventual wedding day, will you be able to look them in the armoured turret knowing that a tiny machine had more influence on their development than you did?

Science's role in our lives is growing but we shouldn't rob our children of the choice to reject its incursions, no matter how badass they could be.

UofT Grads Develop Digital Sorting Hat

Ideal jobs now within grasp of students

Alex Blaine Layder
Toike Oike Mad Hatter

A start-up named "Tophat Bifocals" based out of The Entrepreneurship Hatchery at the University of Toronto has released a prototype of their flagship product that uses science to match arts students with ideal jobs.

The device is named "The Sorting Hat", is the newest addition to the wearable tech craze.

Although the final version of the hat has not been released, the company has done extensive testing on the prototype and have already seen it match thousands of graduates with their ideal employer.

"After putting on the hat, the small LCD screen on the front promptly displayed 'Tim Hortons,'" tells Psychology graduate Figmund Sreud. "There must be a problem with the software!"

The hat uses the same software currently employed by on-line dating websites to make sure each student finds the perfect fit. Personal traits are measured by biometric sensors installed under the rim of the hat and users are categorized based on their lack of useful skills and degree of desperation. A proprietary algorithm then takes this data and finds the ideal workplace for the user.

Based on statistics gathered through the product's beta testing, the workplaces most compatible for arts students are Starbucks, Tim Hortons and Second Cup. This has caused outrage amongst leaders of the fast food industry because of the apparent biases with the device.

The founders of Tophat Bifocals refused on comment on allegations made against them regarding secret funding by the coffee industry.

Depression At An All-Time Low

Can't even get out of bed anymore

Virginia Cumming
Toike Oike Armchair Psychologist

TORONTO — A recent study by Dr. Fred N. Slip of the Centre for Addiction and Mental Health, in conjunction with researchers at Mount Sinai Hospital, has found that depression is at an all-time low. The results of the study show a drop from 30% to 10% over the past 5 years, with a continued downward trend expected for the next decade. Slip concludes that, as the most depressing mental illness, even depression is depressed now.

Over the course of the study, depression was found to be exhibiting more of the classic symptoms, including increased fatigue, a decrease in the ability to concentrate, as well as increased alcoholism. Depression also began reading the works of Friedrich Nietzsche and Sylvia Plath during this time, reading the news and crying, and started to doubt whether, in the end, it was really all worth it after all.

Researchers also noted that previously easy tasks had now become difficult to complete, but this was dismissed, as it was felt that the proximity of depression to the University of Toronto may have been skewing the results of the tests.

The study has, however, been met with a considerable degree of controversy, especially in the academic community. Many have claimed that they were just doing this for attention, and that depression should just try being happier. There have also been accusations that depression should stop complaining, because other people have it far worse, so there's no reason to be depressed., and that it is really just being lazy, otherwise it would stop being so depressed all the time. One novel argument against depression's diagnoses is that it does not look depressed, which is a classic indicator of mood.

While researchers are unsure why depression develops, there are many hypotheses as to the cause. It is important to note that those who suffer from a lack of vitamin D and sunlight are at greater risk for depression. As such, university students in particular are recommended to actually go outside once in a while, and to get all the D they can, as often as possible. This is not a permanent solution however, and more research must be done into depression's condition.

"Let's face it," said Slip, "depression is probably an University of Toronto student."

So, You Only Read the Toike for the Headlines, Huh?

The Toike Oike’s Guide to IEEE Citations

Mike Literus
Toike Oike Headliner

Here you are on the last page, and hey, now you’ve read all the headlines and think you’ve gotten all the good jokes out of this issue. What you may be failing to recognize, however, is that all of those articles whose titles you got a cheap chuckle out of actually contained bodies of text as well. Yeah. Someone wrote them. One of our stressed and probably hungover staff took time out of their busy life to create cutting edge satire for your enjoyment. And you didn’t even read it. You little shit.

This is exactly the kind of nonsense that makes humour news writing so goddamn unpopular. It’s pricks like you who bring down the whole spirit of the Toike Oike. We work every month to produce this high-brow publication, and all you feel like doing is grabbing a copy from the stand, maybe just ‘cause it had boobs on the front, and then skimming through the bold-print for a laugh or two. Your type makes me sick.

You might think it’s no big deal, but it’s insulting to us as humourists. I mean, what do you think we do at our meetings? Just sit around like a bunch of schmucks and pull gag headlines out of our asses? Yeah, well, we don’t. Sometimes we plan the centrespread, too. Now either read a few of the actual articles, or put this classy tabloid back on the rack, you dense bastard.

Toike Oike Still Popular Despite Our Best Efforts

Vinnie Briey
Toike Oike REDACTED

Let me begin by asking just what the fuck is wrong with you. Yes, you. Why are you still reading this shit? By now you’ve probably already spotted the four dozen typos and grammatical errors our editor has added to the articles. You probably stopped laughing after a few sentences in, or maybe you just skimmed the headlines. Nobody’s judging you for that; I mean, we do it too, and we have to write the fucking things ourselves. But you’re still here, even after seeing the center spread, even after reading the childish scribbles we call the “comics” section, you’re still reading this rag instead of burning it for warmth.

You know, it takes a surprising amount of effort to write for the Toike. Very few people appreciate how difficult it is to get so sloshed on cheap rum that we won’t remember what we wrote in the morning. It’s the only way we can keep our consciences clean. Every time a new issue comes out we play Russian Roulette with the new content, trying to pick the articles we think are ours. Why do you guys think we write using pseudonyms? It allows us the delusion of thinking that maybe, just maybe, it was us who wrote that one passable article. What, you thought Kanye Lingis actually writes satire for UoT students?

I’m just completely shocked that you’re even reading THIS article, when clearly it’s just another rambling monologue about the state of the Toike. I bet you read the editorials too, you freak. I don’t even know where we’re going to go from here. It should have been clear years ago that we’ve been trying to drive this paper into the ground. I mean, come on, we actually encourage you to go around assaulting strangers with indelible ink to the face! We’re actively promoting the kind of behaviour that will get you a criminal record and a restraining order, and that doesn’t sound like a “fuck off” to you?!

Everyone but you only uses us to prop doors open in Sanford Fleming on weekends or during exams. We’d be printing it blank if we could, but the faculty insists that as long as we’ve even got one monthly reader, we’ve got to continue. That’s on you, man. You’re literally our only reader, and you’re killing us. Most of us are engineers! You think we have time to do Calculus problem sets AND write this drivel? Our GPAs are already in the garbage, and god knows employers don’t give two shits about extracurriculars like this.

We print the pages with shitty ink so it stains your fingers, we put all the new issues strategically close to recycling bins, we begin each issue with a personal message from a self-styled goat-blower, and yet you’re still reading the goddamn Toike. Fuck you and the horse you rode in on. I swear, the next issue is going to be written in fucking wingdings. I’m out.

Toike ideas show up at the beginning of the month.

Not intended for citing articles from the Toike Oike

Alt Effour
Toike Oike Father of None

The IEEE citation method is the standard for all engineering documents, but where it came from or how to apply it are mysteries lost to time. Luckily, we here at the Toike Oike have figured out how to imitate the process, or at least trick your grader into thinking that you know what you are doing.

Step 1: Complete your research on your topic and gather your resources. Resources can be any published material, while additional resources such as interviews, surveys and emails can be used, they are not inherently included in the IEEE format.

Step 2: Organize your references in order of appearance – the order of your bibliography and the order of references in your paper should match.

Step 3: Mark all in-text citations with dope-ass reference codes enclosed in square brackets (i.e. [DOPE], [ASS], [FUCK])

Example:

“Scientists have recently discovered a direct correlation between intelligence levels and wearing your pants below your buttocks [THUG].”

Or:

“According to the student researchers [IDIOTS], there is a clear link between the deliciousness of bacon and crime rate in the US.”

Step 4: Panic because you realized that you are either:

a) Over your word count by a factor of 2.

b) Have no idea what you’re actually supposed to write about and that your entire report is just cleverly (or blatantly) crafted bullshit.

Step 5: Spend about three hours on Wikipedia to study your topic for one hour.

Step 7: Wonder what happened to step 6.

Step 8: Drop out of school. You didn’t need engineering anyway. It’s time to fulfil your lifetime dream of joining the circus.

Step 9: Enrol in clown school. Meet a nice acrobat, go on a few dates, get good grades, and start planning for your future.

Step 10: Get kicked out of clown school for improper citations. The circus uses MLA.

Tinder Dickpic Review

Olly Swell
Toike Oike Cunning Linguist

This picture from Julio* is spectacular. He took it from a tasteful angle that shows off his great slight curvature, perfect for hitting that g-spot. The inclusion of the scrotum is a wise choice, enhancing the recipient’s perception of his length. The lighting is soft and the background is not a distracting messy bedroom or a sketchy car interior. His use of the Rise filter really complements his member.

Bonus points for the stray pubes - you won’t need to floss when you’re done with him.

It could benefit from aggressive noise reduction (not just for the messages he’s sending you) and a shallower depth of field. Turning the camera a bit so that it faces the head a bit more would make him look girthier and more proportionate.

Overall, an 8.5/10.

Engineer Loins Not Up to Snuff

Olly Swell
Toike Oike Ringer

Torontonian engineer Boris Yezekael has been brought up on charges of negligence. Despite a spotless ten-year career as a civil engineer, he now stands to lose his iron ring, and many like him may face the same threat.

Yezekael faces charges after a playground slide he had commissioned snapped, injuring his own ten-month old son who was using it at the time. According to industry sources, the infant was not approved for use with that incline of slide, nor was it structurally sound to begin with.

“This is an increasingly common complaint,” said a representative from the Professional Engineers of Ontario. “Kids these days just have lower tolerances than they used to. They’re loud, inefficient, and frankly their squash load is pitiful. Engineers need to be more responsible when coming up with these new designs.”

Professional engineers wear their iron ring in the line of duty to remind them of their responsibility, and losing it means losing their professional status.

“I wasn’t even wearing my ring when I made my little boy,” said Yezekael in interview. “At least, not on my finger... Wait, are you writing this down?”

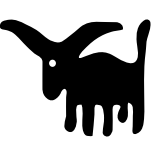

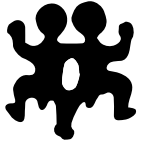

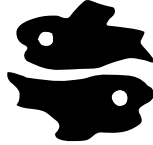

Ongoing investigations into the fragility of modern children has shown a decline in quality since whenever you were a kid, and suggests that the probable cause is whatever boyband is popular now.

The real concern, say watchdog groups, is that more load is being placed on these children as years pass. Critics are skeptical that these children can handle the increasing pressure, and are encouraging increased industry standards for relationships among engineers.

This initiative may carry some weight, as hard hat inspections are to be offered at the University of Toronto Sexual Education Centre.

Get involved with your friendly neighbourhood Toike Oike! Anyone can join. It doesn’t matter what year, faculty, discipline, or college you’re a part of; if you can read this then you’re good enough for us.

Are you fairly hilarious? Can you photoshop like a boss? Can you draw or sketch? Do you have an appreciation for humour? Do you have writing experience and want to try your hand at humour writing? Do people think you're funny but you're far too modest to ever admit that you're a funny person? Do you have the mad English skills required to pick out our typos and grammar follies?

If you answered “yes” to ANY of the above questions, we could definitely use a person like you!

Head over to www.toike.skule.ca/join and get on the mailing list!

You'll be automatically notified of any and all upcoming meeting dates, times, and locations. Meetings are where we work on the Toike. They're filled with great friends, good times, and tons of free shit like food and BEvERages.
