EDITORIAL

Fuck. October already. Better get started on this editorial.

This month we're going to talk about one of my most favourite things ever: Beer. Beer is good. I like beer and it makes me happy. So it's only natural that in one of my many moments of F!rosh week drunkenness the (inspired) idea of a beer-themed Toike came to me. Now this isn't an idea that one can simply ignore, which is why you are currently holding in your hands – wait for it – The Beer Toike.

On top of the general brilliance of this idea, it's also topical. I imagine most of you will be reaching for a drink quite soon what with midterms coming up, so maybe this will inspire you. We even had four of our seasoned writers review 20 different beers so you can be more informed when selecting your method of intoxication. So you're welcome.

There's lots of great material in this issue, some of which I'd like to thank all of our new writers for. And of course our veterans are still here to top it off, because none of them have anything better to do, either. Following the success of September's issue it looks like this is shaping up to be a great year.

Anyway, go read, have fun, and good luck studying for your midterms... Shit, I guess I gotta do that too. Later, all.

P.S. Does anybody even read these?

The Toike Editor's Favourite Drinks

The Manhattan

- 2oz Whiskey
- 0.5oz Sweet Vermouth
- 6 drops Bitters
- 1 slice Lime

Fill a cocktail shaker with ice. Add whiskey, vermouth, lime, and mint. Stir well and serve over ice.

The Irish Cream Soda

- 1.5 oz Spiced Rum
- Sprite

Fill an old fashioned glass with ice. Pour in one shot of Captain Morgan's Spiced Rum. Fill with sprite. Add one drop of blue food colouring and three drops of yellow food colouring for optimum colour.

Beer

- Beer

Pour beer. Drink Beer. Repeat.

I love you, beer.

COLOPHON

The Toike Oike is summoned each month by means of ritual sacrifice. Following the ceremony in which our writers ingest copious amounts of poison, The Toike Oike will appear and possess the writers, thus inspiring our new content. Unfortunately, this ritual erases the memories of all participants and impairs their motor functions, so we ask the bartender to tell us all the ideas we came up with the next day.

WHAT HO?

The Toike Oike is an alcoholic beverage produced by the saccharification of starch and fermentation of the resulting sugar. The starch and saccharification enzymes are often derived from malted cereal grains, most commonly malted barley and wheat. Most Toikes are also flavoured with hops, which add bitterness and act as a natural preservative, though other flavourings such as herbs or fruit may occasionally be included. The preparation of The Toike Oike is called brewing.

DISCLAIMER

The radical, ultra-alcoholic opinions expressed in this newspaper reflect those of the Engineering Society and the University of Toronto. In fact, they even reflect the opinions of the writers. NOT! If you happen to find any of the material within these pages offensive, do not try to sue us, as we have a crack team of racially diverse lawyers ready to bring tha pain and give out mix tapes. Sucka MC's ain't shit.

Engineers Tackle Alcohol Abuse on Campus

Imprisoned Beer Freed and Ingested Into New Homes

by G. R. Beck
Toike Oike Concerned Drinker

UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO –

Billions of chickens each year are forced to live in tiny cages and injected with growth hormones; tens of millions of cows each year are confined to concrete feedlots with no room to walk around; but none of these industrial atrocities come even close to the inhumane treatment and trafficking of alcohol on campus.

Typically, alcohols such as beer live in a comfortable environment such as a beer glass or stein such that they are free to breathe and slosh around with dignity. However, with the industrialization of the food and beverage services in modern Canada, beer is now being confined into tiny cans and bottles with little to no air or space to move around.

Some beers in captivity can become so agitated that they foam at the mouth when released; because of this, thousands of gallons of beer fall to the ground every year never to rise again. In fact, agitated beers when released have a 1 in 5 chance of going overboard and losing their head.

Fortunately, the intrepid Faculty of Undergraduate Engineering is doing everything they can to take on this travesty. Starting September, thousands of engineers across campus will be paying out of their own pocket to help release these captive beers from processing giants such as The Beer Store and the LCBO.

They will not be reimbursed for their efforts, these selfless heroes, and some will even be sent to jail by the government for attempting to free too much at once.

Other alcohol, such as wine and spirits, will not be forgotten either. Wine, typically kept in brutal captivity in large quantities for decades at a time, is released little by little by the average household.

This inhumane method of splitting the wine apart several times over causes intense trauma and PTSD (post tannins stress disorder). Engineers across U of T, are doing their part by releasing entire bottles at once.

Spirits, such as vodka and rum, are kept in solitary confinement and rendered unable to socialize for extended periods of time. Engineers are helping to mend this delicate situation by mingling newly released spirits with sodas and juices before sending them down into their new home.

Even released alcohols are not always safe from inhumane treatment. At the end of every night, gallons upon gallons of alcohol released into temporary humane living glasses and solo cups goes neglected and unfinished. Well intentioned students attempting to free more alcohol from captivity than they're willing to house in their stomachs, often do not realize the terrible mistakes they are making until it is too late.

Almost always, these poor liquids end up down the drain, but fortunately the community of engineers on campus is more than willing make sure their comrades finish the job by cheering and shouting until no drop is left behind.

Engineers at U of T endure some of the most brutal schedules and workloads, but almost all of them are able to find time to coordinate and help free captive alcohols in large groups across Toronto. SUDS, an engineering pub located in the SF basement every Friday night, is a non-profit volunteer organization where students can get involved and pitch in any way they can at the end of each week.

With any luck, the University of Toronto will soon be able to recognize the selfless acts taken up by the committed engineers on campus and provide much needed funding to help expand these projects. Less class and homework would also help.

Later classes too.

And less exams.

Streetcar Forced to Take Subway to Work

Commuters Notice "Significant Decrease in Standing Space"

by Eugene Brown
Toike Oike Transit Expert

TORONTO, ON –

Passengers on the TTC's Bloor-Danforth line noticed that their commute to work last Thursday was notably more cramped than usual.

Due to recent economic troubles and disputes at City Hall, TTC Streetcar 4228 was forced to ride the subway to work last week and is expected to continue until further notice.

"I personally hate this commute," 4228 said in an exclusive interview. "There's no cell service, I always have to sit next to a hobo, and I'm late for work at least once a week."

Other passengers are also disconcerted about their new passenger. "With this giant streetcar in the aisle, I can't walk down the car and ask everyone for money," said a hobo. "I might have to resort to taking my begging elsewhere."

Complaints have risen dramatically since the streetcar started commuting via subway, as loading 4228 onto the car adds to the numerous delays and adds a substantial amount of time to the other commuters' lengthy trip.

The Toronto Transit Commission is still trying to resolve the subway braking issue, which causes 4228 to slam into the rear of the car, crushing passengers.

High School Relationship Somehow Still Intact After One Month

Classmates Shocked as Couple Remains Together Through First Month of Classes

by Kanye Lingis
Toike Oike Relationship Expert

TORONTO, ON –

When Ross Maxwell began attending the University of Toronto, he – like many other freshman students – entered a long distance relationship with his high school girlfriend Ashley, who attends Queen’s University. This practice, which is common among freshman students, usually ends in failed relationships. In Ross’ case, however, the relationship is still going strong an entire month later.

Friends of Ross have told the Toike that Ashley seems “just fine” with the little communication between the two, and “doesn’t expect Ross to shovel out all of his money to go visit her every weekend.” In addition, it has been reported that she actually understands that her boyfriend is quite busy settling into a new city and residence, on top of classes, and he gets that she’s busy with the same.

“We chat at least once a week or so, and carry out text conversations when we can, but otherwise we understand that we won’t have as much time for each other anymore,” Maxwell told us in an exclusive interview. “She gets that I’m really busy with classes and settling in, and running for first-year rep with my college’s students’ society. Ashley’s really cool that way. It’s one of the reasons I like her so much – and one of the reasons I would never do anything to jeopardize our relationship.”

Still, however, the month has not passed without tension. With frosh week came copious amounts of alcohol and hordes of new friends out to push the limits of their newfound freedom, and Maxwell has not been without temptation. Luckily, both Maxwell and Ashley decided to stay away from such juvenile activities and to keep things classy.

Instead, the two just hung out with casual acquaintances and platonic friends for the week. “Hey babe, I won’t be around tonight,” Ashley texted Ross in one such good-decision-moment the Friday evening of frosh week. “Going out dancing with Gary. ... lol The girls! Sorry! Autocorrect. haha Anyway, don’t call tonight.”

The couple is expected to break up in two weeks’ time and then never speak to one another again.

News Briefs

Street Racers on the Don Valley Parkway Caught Driving Upwards of 20km/h

TORONTO, ON –

Two cars were spotted speeding down the Don Valley Parkway during rush hour last Thursday. One local driver estimates the cars could have been going as fast as 20 kilometers per hour.

Police are on the lookout for any similar incidents, but it seems as if this is a once in a lifetime occurrence on the DVP.

Toike Oike traffic correspondent Butts Tough had this to say on the incident: “This really shouldn’t happen in such a modern city as ours. We have plenty of measures put in place to ensure that all traffic moves at the most efficient pace for all, and people like this really mess things up for everyone else.”

When asked to comment on the occurrence, Mayor Rob Ford said, “I do not smoke crack cocaine and I am not addicted to crack cocaine.”

First Year Student Finds Haultain Building

TORONTO, ON –

In a recent groundbreaking geographical discovery, a first year student attending the University of Toronto reported last week that he has discovered the location of the mythical Haultain Building on campus.

Andrew Lee, having only spent a month at U of T, claims that he had class in the Mechanical Engineering building one day, and as he exited he decided to turn a different direction and go down the alleyway in hopes to return home to his residence faster.

“I thought if I took a different route I could find a more efficient way to get home”, Lee has stated in an interview. “Instead what I found was the legendary Haultain Building, thought only to be a myth.”

After the preliminary archaeological investigation is complete, the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering hopes to use the space to hold tutorials.

A team was sent to investigate the building last week, travelling to the upper floors using the elevator in lieu of the stairs. They have not been heard from since, though the administration remains hopeful that, so long as the number of deaths in the building is less than the number of survivors, the building will still suit the needs of TAs for tutorial space.

Scientists Invent Powdered Water

Just Add Water!

by David Savage
Toike Oike Pure Columbian Blow

BUDAPEST, HUNGARY –

Following nearly four years and millions of dollars in research funding, a team of chemical engineers from the University of Toronto excitedly announced their latest innovation this Monday: powdered water.

Speaking amid expressions of disbelief upon the faces of fellow scientists and engineers at the International Water Conservation Conference in Budapest, the research team detailed their revolutionary discovery, which has been dubbed “hydro-powderization”.

“Basically, we’ve managed to invent a chemical process that extracts about 99.9% of the wetness out of water, leaving behind a white powder that strongly resembles cocaine,” explained research lead Dr. Herbert Miller.

“One litre of water yields approximately 0.5 kilograms of a substance that looks pretty much like your average-quality Columbian blow,” Dr. Miller continued, the excitement in voice clearly audible. “But here’s the kicker: it’s actually just water. Powdered water.”

According to experimental data from the group’s research, the “hydro-powderization” process is also fully reversible. In order to reconstitute the powder to its original form, simply add water.

“When you’re thirsty for some powdered water, just put about two standard tablespoons of powder into a glass and fill up the rest with water – whether it be from a bottle, or the tap or a nearby stream, any water will do – and voilà, safe, drinkable powdered water,” proclaimed Dr. Miller.

During question period, a few scientists in the audience inquired into the specific chemical process used to obtain powdered water. Smiling, Dr. Miller replied, “it’s very complicated,” before pulling up a slide featuring a large flowchart detailing thousands of complicated chemical names and processes. “Don’t worry too much about the details,” he stressed.

The research team concluded their presentation by highlighting several applications that are already being considered for powdered water.

“We’re currently looking into developing small, individual packages of powdered water that can be air-dropped to communities in drought-stricken areas, a process that simply isn’t feasible with liquid water,” implored Dr. Miller. “We could effectively negate the impacts of widespread drought in impoverished communities, as early as 2020. And that’s just the beginning.”

The research team also confirmed that powdered water is currently undergoing preliminary military testing, as part of survival kits issued to personnel operating in extreme environments. Early trials have concluded that the powder can be reconstituted with urine, but the resulting water acquires a yellowish tint and tastes strongly of human urine. Despite this and other minor setbacks, Dr. Miller and his team are confident that their invention will revolutionize drinking water.

“Whenever people question the future prospects of powdered water, I just look at them and say, ‘how could it not succeed?’ It has literally thousands of useful applications!”

Justin Trudeau Stands Up in Hazy House of Commons to Propose 7-Eleven Run

“Guys.....we have to get Doritos” States Liberal Leader

by Mike Literus
Toike Oike Resident Stoner

OTTAWA, ON –

Political discourse took an unexpected turn in the House of Commons last week when Justin Trudeau introduced a motion for what he called an “essential” trip to the nearby 7-Eleven for munchies. Other members of the house later commented that this motion was strongly supported, since “pretty much everyone had the munchies”.

The speaker of the house accepted Mr. Trudeau’s proposal, and the issue was put to a vote amongst the giggling MPs. This move on the part of the speaker had been seen as “unorthodox” by some, and “dope” by others.

With two votes against the motion (Peter McKay and John Baird, who instead expressed their interest to order Pizza Pizza for delivery), and only one abstention (Elizabeth May, who was reportedly “pretty spaced out” at the time), the motion passed easily.

The owners of the local Ottawa convenience store were reportedly caught somewhat off-guard by the parade of ravenous government representatives who shortly afterward came parading into the establishment looking to procure foodstuffs.

Trudeau’s motion came at the end of a particularly mellow session in the House of Commons, during which NDP leader Thomas Mulcair seemed significantly less angry than usual. Mr. Trudeau commented that Mr. Mulcair was “pretty chill” the entire time.

Although Prime Minister Harper has declined to comment on the goings-on within the house recently, many political analysts are interpreting the whole situation as quite remarkable, primarily because MPs are getting more done in the Commons recently than ever before.

WHERE TO FIND WEED ON CAMPUS

Now that September is over and the harvest season is rolling in, it is time to reap the goods of the land. And you the reader ask “How shall I do this? Where will I find the finest of greens? Who will show me the way?” The answer to all of those questions can be found in the map below. There is currently an ongoing campaign to eradicate these weeds on campus. Some people choose to use fire, which unfortunately causes it to release large quantities of smoke every day.

Frat Houses: Ripe Dandelions

If you head up towards the frat houses, you'll find they don't take very good care of their lawns. In fact, the dandelions here grow extremely ripe. So if you're looking for some blow with your weed, this is the place to go.

Varsity Stadium: Grass

Among the athletes and AstroTurf at Varsity Stadium there's no weed to be found, but behind the stands where nobody's looking you'll find some grass growing in the corners.

St. Mike's: Ragweed

Like frat houses, the gardens at St. Mike's don't see a lot of maintenance. The weed they have there is mostly ragweed and probably not worth your time, but late at night it's real close and weed is weed. It's not going to collect itself.

Sid Smith: Dandelions

Behind the Sid Smith building seems like a pretty clean place, but descend the stairs to the lower level and it gets pretty seedy, perfect for dandelion growth.

Front Campus: Crabgrass

You'd never expect to find weed in the broad daylight of front campus, but lurking beneath the trees where campus groundskeepers often forget to check you can usually find discreet individuals such as Crabgrass

Queen's Park: Canadian Thistle

Queen's Park is a hotbed for finding weed. With all the homeless, student, and drunk foot traffic that goes on, pollen and seed pods easily latch onto pedestrians and spread growth everywhere. Keep an eye out for the Canada thistle.

The Toike Oike's
October Beer Review

We all love beer. It's there for us in times of celebration, and in times of desperation. It's what brings us all together at the end of a long week. The only problem is that with so many different beers, choice can become intimidating. That's why we collected our most seasoned beer drinkers on the Toike staff, John, Thomas, Aidan, and Chris to review an assortment of beers in order to inform our dear readers about which ones are worth trying. We each reviewed 5 different beers in different categories. To enhance our creative abilities and cleanse our palates, shots of Jager were had after each beer. In order to fully portray our enjoyment of our beverages, spelling and grammar are not edited in this review.

LIGHT BEER	JOHN	THOMAS	AIDAN	CHRIS
	Bud Light Lime Strong aroma of douchebag. I suspect there is no alcohol in this as well. Dammit, I have to drink this whole thing? This beer has lime in it. It contains the very essence of what shouldn't be in beer.	Old Milwaukee Ice First impression: I am pretty sure I just drank water. Although after a few sips it still tastes like water, so no discernable loss of taste. I would have to say in my utmost and professional beer drinking career, that the only plus of this beer is that there is a semi naked woman on the front.	Coors Light Ice T OK, who was the jackass who thought mixing beer and Iced Tea was a good idea? This neither tastes like beer nor iced tea. I feel that I can't accurately describe what I'm tasting here, but I am detecting undertones of swallowed vomit in the flavour profile of this beverage. I'm finding it hard to even classifying this as beer, its more like a cooler.	Coors Light My first impression of the Rock Mountain Legend is... well at least it's refreshing. I suppose when you market for temperature you're not really concerned with taste. And presumably it was cheap. You know what they say, a dollar might turn to a million then we all rich. Jäger time!

STOUT	JOHN	THOMAS	AIDAN	CHRIS
	Guinness AWWWWWWW YEAH THIS IS THE GOOD STUFF. MOTH-ERFUCKING GUINNESS IS MY FAVOURITE THING. This beer reminds me of being back at home with my family. The thickness and complexity of it continue to amaze me every time I drink it. Much better than the last beer.	Kilkenny Fuck you all who say this ain't no stout! After the last one....this is like God's vagina, but without substances. I approve and want to just leave it at this. The creamy taste mixed with the subtle aftertaste of lovely. I almost want to just alright i got hungry and started eating my panzerotti again, but fuck this beer is beautiful.	Brava Strange, I thought that stouts were dark in colour. This isn't. So, I mean, the generally accepted rule for beer is that the colour of the beer matches the colour of the packaging. Brava does not follow this rule. I opened the dark, ebony coloured can and out pours this piss coloured swill. I'm honestly starting to doubt that this is a stout. I may have made a mistake here...	Mill Street Cobblestone Stout After drinking jäger anything tastes good, but the truth is this beer tastes kinda like an alcoholic coffee. Don't they also have a coffee porter? Good but expensive, to afford this you gotta be throwin hunned, hunned. Back to jäger I guess, snapchat is also a thing.

RED ALE	JOHN	THOMAS	AIDAN	CHRIS
	Popper's Ice Cranberry Wait, this isn't a red beer....this isn't even beer. I swear this is just bong water with added sugar and coloured red. Jeez, how do the white girls do it? This is just juice! I imagine if the kool-aid man and smirnoff fucked, this would be their bastard offspring.	Innis & Gunn So, this beer is fantastic. I really cant imagine anything better, I know the last one was amazing. Did you also know that the clitoris is a muscle... I was blown away. So if you didnt know, this beer is stored in whiskey barrles and it is just heavenly. Whisps of honey are just. God once said, and I quote: "Innis and Gun is the juice I drink, I therefore wil share it amongst the wirld!"	86 Red A rich, sweet tasting beer. After the last two fuckups, things are finally starting to get good. This is literally the swwettest beer I hafe ever tasted. It actually kinda tastes like sangria or rum punch. Also, theis beer is 8%, so, you know, soo much moar bong for youre alcohol buck. I mean its like drinking two coors iced tea at once, and tasts like at least 76% better.	Rickards Red I dunno if you've ever had this beer, but if you have you know it's gassy. Fuckin rickard's makes me fart and burp like nobody's business. And it is nobody's busi-ness. So smell my farts K????? Damn I was supposed to quote rap too. Let's just get to the jäger now.

IPA	JOHN	THOMAS	AIDAN	CHRIS
	Dead Elephant IPA hahhehhhaacha peopl maecon weird faces AT THE IPAS'S lolololololololol well, this is weirf. i dont klike the bttnesnz thoegh. whatever, alcovooze is alcobooze. NOW I SHALL DRINGK! I'm prettys ure an actual elephant is in htis can. Innno why i even bought his beer, it so weird though....IPA was literal the worst idea. It feels like i am drinking soap. Well art leastt my insidss will b cleenn.	Mad Tom IPA Well, I looked forward to this for the sole reason that this had my name in it. well fuck was that ever wrong, god am i scared because I have the taste of soap in my mouth. But I digress, because this beer is actually not the greatest in the world. I totally thought that it would be better, someone i knew once swore by it, but now I am considering the fact that he swore, and then drank because of the incoming horrible taste.... BUTT FUCK its p bad yall	Fish Eye Eye.P.A. So down the Hatch. Over the lops and throught de gums, looks out stomachh her it cums. Man, I fucking love beer, and this is no exception. Its anothoor strang Bear, and It even Lifts!!!!111!one!!eleven The cooopl brewed, AMBer-hued aile cascaDEws gracefully down my throoaat like thtE fiiiinest Cham-paine. My tastwbuds have been tajeon on a magican Joun trny to another edfjnbmerntions.	Wells IPA This beer is pretty bitter but honestly at this piont i counltd-tyn care less. Its beer . Sooooo yeah. Im daunted by the fact that I still have to finish thiss one ant dhthen dring kanother one. Mna those jäger shots are getting to me. ANYway I really don't know if this ber ios any good, but hell, why not try it, its not bad actually. Are we really doing more jäger? (I've gottten the dots down so far)

CHEAP BEER	JOHN	THOMAS	AIDAN	CHRIS
	Lakeport This is prety foogd. After all the disgusting (and great) beers onight we have finally arrived at the pinnacle of brewing genius: cheap nbeer that tastes great when you're drunk as shit. Ya know, yhis jsut proves that alcohol solves all our porblems, in this case, the taste of shitty beer. But I like this now,being that when you're as durkn as us, this is good choice. CHEERS, TOIKE READERS-!	Pabst Blue Ribbon So we have fianarly arrived here, the final countdown of the PBR, because fuck you all I want PBR to finish :3 thats right thats a fucking emoticon. Well we have all had PBR at SUDS so screw revieweing ittttt	Boxer Thees beaeer ios fht lowesrr leeeegale limut. So thaTTTV meant that uyoun can get FuCked Up for LEss mon-eyss. YRo beeerOoiffjritg i wa-nyts to derdszn ant mooore, and i loves irt, I DOONTY CAREEDEE!!!!11`11W21` i love this ber4 caused ist got alcomohosl in it DHIEUSRTUOIKASJ Inrm having a great time...fev n. NEVER GPONNA GIBVE YOU U[PERLRE!!!	Labatt Blue I suspect that if I weren't drunk I would be vdr upset at the quality of this beer. As such, I am not eally upstet.. Turnso ut I can hardly taste it. Lmao, how do peopl elive without alcohol. Truh.... I really don't wanna di more hager but the boottle is not emptytill...shit...

Everyone Happy Faculty Emailed Them About Yet Another Career Seminar

Students Relieved as Their Inboxes Fill

by Kate Middleton
Toike Oike Compulsive Inbox Checker

TORONTO, ON - Students in the faculty of Arts and Science were thrilled Tuesday when, just after 1pm, they all received an email inviting them to yet another career fair.

“Personally, I love getting email updates from the faculty,” said Emily Singh, a third-year psychology student. “They’re like a really, really concerned parent, just always in contact. If more than an hour goes by without an email from the registrar I honestly start to get worried. What if they’ve died, you know?”

Travis Burke, a second-year English student, felt the same. “I think my favourite thing about career fair reminders is that they’re this great weekly reminder of the fact that I have little to no real career prospects.”

The Arts and Science registrar sends an average of thirty-two emails to its students per day, all as a part of an ongoing effort to build up a good rapport with its students. Said one faculty representative, “It really is working well. The students even have these cute little pet names for the faculty. They call us, ‘those motherfuckers in the registrar’s office.’ All friendly, of course.”

The faculty’s current plans are to continue with the ongoing email updates and reminders for the foreseeable future, with potential to increase the emails to forty per day in December. Said one UofT student, “It’s like they want us to hate them.”

Mr. Clean and Grandma May be More than Just Friends

by Russel D. Jimmies
Toike Oike Multisurface Cleaner

Kitchen, bathroom, and various other surfaces in your Grandma’s house have been getting noticeably cleaner of late, sources have confirmed, as details of the sultry relationship between household cleaning products mascot Mr. Clean and your Grandma came to light this week.

The torrid partnership which reportedly has been going on for nearly 6 months, came as a shock to some family members who claim to have believed that the pair were “just very good friends”.

“Oh, they’re much more than just friends now. In fact, they can’t get enough of each other,” confided Agnes Hart, local bingo team captain and close friend of your Grandma. “They started off with just a few casual get-togethers on the weekends but now it’s gotten to the point where all they do is have two-hour long steamy, soapy, shower sessions together.”

The affair is said to have began after your Grandma purchased Mr. Clean’s “magic eraser” several months ago and ever since she discovered the scrubbing power, she “just couldn’t quit.”

According to neighbourhood observers, Mr. Clean and your Grandma have been getting busy together in other areas of the house too. Specifically, the kitchen, living room, bedrooms, laundry room, garage, basement and even on the backyard patio. In fact, your Grandma’s friends from the Rotary Club are reporting that ever since Mr. Clean and your Grandma starting doing it on a regular basis, the place has, frankly, never looked better.

“That Mr. Clean apparently has quite the ‘magic’ touch, if you know what I mean,” Hart told the Toike, a knowing smirk spreading across her face. “And by golly, it’s sure made [your Grandma] a happy gal!”

Unfortunately, your Grandmother was unavailable for comment by press time, as she and Mr. Clean reportedly spent the entire afternoon giving the gutters a “breathtaking” and “long-overdue” scrubbing.

U of T Student Abandons Vow to Work Hard This Year

Is Rewatching Breaking Bad Instead

by Goat
Toike Oike Party Animal

TORONTO, ON – Fourth-year student Prabh Hendriks is not, despite loud promises made both to herself and her friends at the beginning of the year, going “HAM” on her academics. Hendriks made this vow half-way through first week, when she was made aware of the fact that at the rate she was going, she would have graduated with a cumulative GPA of 1.5. With her goals of attending graduate school threatened, Hendriks swore that her days of procrastination were behind her. Our sources indicate, however, that Prabh is currently sitting on her bed re-watching the entire series of Breaking Bad, and has been doing nothing but this, sleeping, and eating for the past week.

It is reported that Prabh’s good intentions were first foiled by an invitation to go to Pour Girl with friends one fateful night. After two days of consistent hard work, she decided she had earned a break. Since then, Prabh’s work ethic has gone downhill. “She was working really hard at first,” says Victoria, Prabh’s roommate. “I mean she was ahead in all her readings. Prabh just hit a brick wall, though. She hasn’t done anything academic in well over a week.” On average, Prabh arrives at her apartment at 2am every day, sleeps until 11am, debates going to class until 11:30, and then wastes time online until 9pm, at which point she goes out drinking with friends to congratulate herself on all her hard work. “I’m just really pushing myself this year,” Prabh said in an exclusive interview. “I’m not messing around like the past few years. Still, though, it’s all a balancing act. You can’t just work all the time - it’s important I have some fun, as well.” As Prabh’s due dates and deadlines creep up so do her stress levels, which in turn are causing her to procrastinate even more. “I’m thinking I might re-watch Firefly once I’m done with Breaking Bad,” she was heard telling a good friend last Tuesday. “God, what a good show. They should never have cancelled that.” Meanwhile, it is reported that Prabh spent at least four hours Monday searching the Google results for “five-year undergrad,” “four-year program in five years,” “is it pathetic to do a five-year undergrad degree in lit studies?,” and “how to make methamphetamines.”

Pixar Announces First Adult-Only Film

Adult Toy Story Gets 2015 Release Date

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA – A company long beloved for making animated films which hold enduring relevance to more mature audiences, Pixar has announced its very first X-rated title.

The studio seems to have been caught off guard by the mixed response to this news, even taking down its interactive promotional website. The site now hosts an official statement saying that Pixar intends to faithfully continue its stories but feels that in order to cater to its original viewers it must grow up and mature along with them, even as it rejuvenates its old franchises.

“Adult Toy Story will be a stimulating romp through the bedroom of our character Ms. Hale,” said Ezra Edwards, one of Pixar’s public representatives, who talked at length about the company’s decision to leave the kids at home for this adventure.

“Kids aren’t the only ones with toys, you know. We’re really proud of the [the first three Toy Story movies] but we wanted to explore the universe we’ve created from a more mature angle, and delve headfirst into the concerns of today’s young adults.”

Edwards also confirmed special cameos from the original movies’ Buzz and Woody, albeit in reimagined forms. The announcement has garnered criticism from the parents of those whose viewership would be denied, though curiously not from the children themselves. However, some critics are saying that such an event was to be expected. “Can you really be surprised, after the all of the hedonistic undercurrents of their recent Monsters’ University?” said film reviewer Ike Navarro. “The company’s perversions have been clear to me since Cars 2; I shudder to think of the indulgent miasma that is Pixar headquarters.”

In the wake of Pixar’s announcement, DreamWorks declared intent to create its own X-rated feature. As their press release read, “we’re always striving to compete with our fellows in the industry.

When the Academy inevitably creates the category for the Best X-Rated Animated Film we hope to uphold our company’s legacy and secure a respectable runner-up award.” DreamWorks has yet to confirm which of its critically tolerated franchises it hopes to rekindle, but critics agree that it would be an impressive feat to not improve it with this decision.

Frosh Excited for Four Years of Alcoholism

Promises of Binge Drinking and Liver Damage “Appealing” According to Incoming Student

by Regina George

TORONTO, ON – First year Alicia Daniels has been excitedly training her liver all summer in preparation for university and the cheap keg beer that she plans to occupy it with.

“My brother was in engineering at U of T, and he told me it’s basically synonymous with alcoholism,” said Alicia when asked to comment on the dangers of underage drinking. “It’s just not that big of a deal. I’m more concerned with having a good fucking time than worrying about things like health and dignity.”

“I mean, that sort of attitude is dangerous,” said fourth-year Mech student Humera Jones when asked to comment, “but university is a time for new experiences. I guess I can’t really fault her, you know?”

Spending habits have increased along with Alicia’s drinking. “I dropped like two hundred bucks on crop tops at Forever 21, and my dad made sure I have eight months worth of Plan B with me here,” the girl commented. Other recent expenses include strong antidepressant medication to eradicate the feeling of emptiness caused by being an engineering student. “My doctor warned me not to mix those with alcohol, but #yolo,” Alicia said.

But what of her plans after four years of socially condoned alcoholism? “Real alcoholism, probably. I’ll move back in with my parents until I hit rock bottom and sink into severe depression, but until then I’m just going to live while I’m young.”
