The Year in Preview

Oil Discovered in Greece ■ Russia Brings Back Witch Hunts ■ World War Trilogy Conclusion

EDITORIAL

G uys, I’m back, and welcome to the March Toike. It is funny and will make you laugh. If it doesn’t, that’s probably because you have no soul* or are some sort of weird sociopath. So enjoy.

March is a wonderful time of year. It’s still fucking cold, there are midterms happening, and the UTSU is about to (re)-elect the same assholes that have been running the organization for the last several years. So what better way to cheer up than to read this handmade Toike?

The theme for this month’s issue is TIME Magazine. Yes, I am aware that that’s just copy-ing someone else’s publication style and it’s not a real theme

SENIOR STAFF WRITER’S EDITORIAL

H ello, dearest reader

March is upon us and the school year is approaching its end, except not actually be-cause first you have to survive March, and then you have to write exams, and then you’re off to whatever pencil-pushing summer job you managed to scrape together so you can try to convince future employ-ers that your degree is worth something when really we all know this is just an excuse to put off for four or five years the inevitability of your complete disillusion with existence and the abandonment of all your childhood dreams.

Spring truly is in the air.

but dammit, we were clean out of ideas and this one turned out quite well anyway. Like always, we were able to come up with the same top-notch content as we always do while at the same time being the most modest newspaper on campus.

As another way for me to fill space with words, I’m writing this sentence.

Anyway, go read the rest of the paper. Well on second thought, you probably are, who the fuck reads these anyway?

Fuck it, might as well just put my grocery list here:

- cheese
- bread
- eggs
- OJ

COLOPHON

The Toike Oike is summoned each month by means of ritual sacrifice. Following the ceremony in which our writers ingest copious amounts of poison, The Toike Oike will appear and possess the writers, thus inspiring our new content. Unfortunately, this ritual erases the memories of all participants and impairs their motor functions, so we ask the bartender to tell us all the ideas we came up with the next day.

WHAT HO?

The Toike Oike was created in 1923 making it the first weekly news magazine in the United States, originally titled Farts. The Toike Oike’s founders wanted to emphasize brevity, so that a busy man could read it in an hour. They changed the name to Toike Oike and used the slogan “Take Time—It’s Brief.” That accounts for its tone, which many people still criticize as too light for serious news and more suited to its heavy coverage of celebrities (including politicians), the entertainment industry, and pop culture.

DISCLAIMER

The radical, ultra-liberal opinions expressed in this newspaper reflect those of the Engineering Society and the University of Toronto. In fact, they even reflect the opinions of the writers and the engineering community in general. NOT! If you happen to find any of the material within these pages offensive, do not try to sue us, as we have a crack team of racially diverse lawyers ready to bring tha pain and give out mix tapes. World War Trilogy in Dire Need of Conclusion

Germans cite lack of inspiration as root cause

G. R. Beck
Toike Oike Luftwaffle Commander

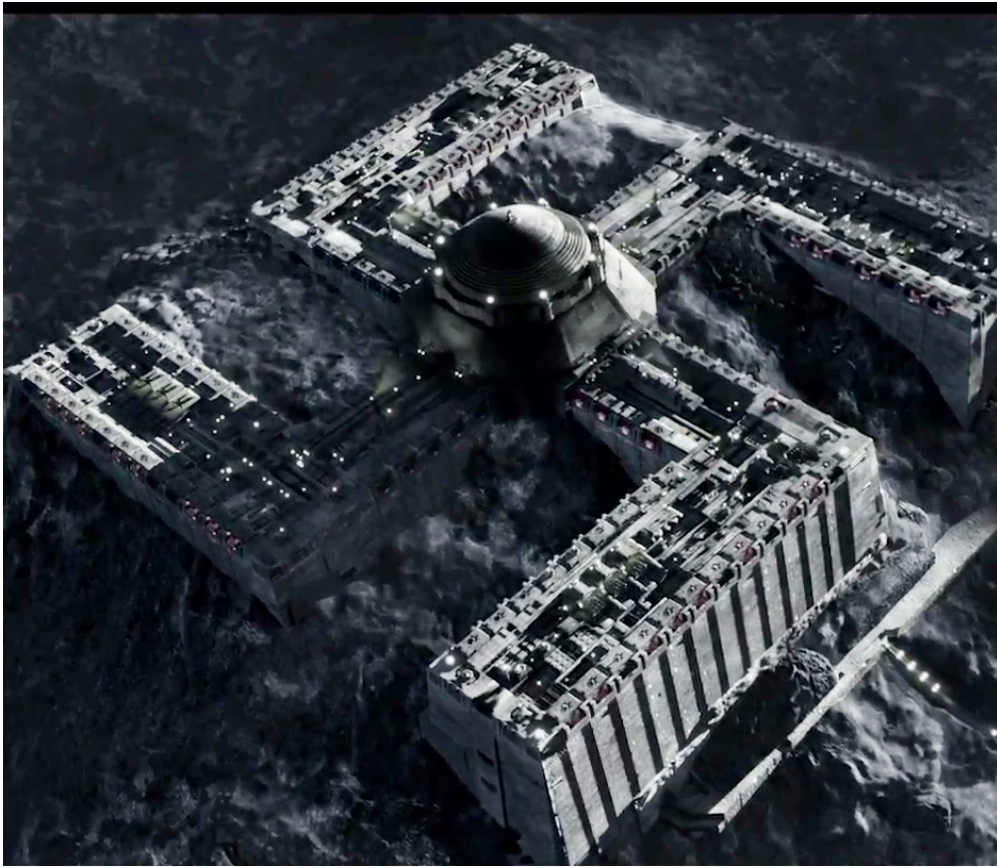

SPACE-TRENCH WARFARE, FLYING AIRCRAFT carriers, and angry Facebook posts are just 3 combat suggestions out of millions made by fans across the world for the upcoming, long-awaited conclusion to the world war trilogy: World War III. Still, after almost 70 years of waiting, fans haven’t even received so much as a trailer, and progress appears to remain stagnant.

Director, producer, and chief antagonist of the first two world wars, Germany, claims that it simply hasn’t had the inspiration for a third world war yet, and that it doesn’t want to rush and produce an inferior product.

“World wars I and II each brought some-thing new and unique to the table,” cited Germany in a recent interview. “The First World War had a lot of intelligent political intrigue leading up to it, gruelling trench warfare, and it practically invented a new genre of war. With World War II we man-aged to catch the whole world off guard with a lightning sequel and then went further and introduced new themes like eugenics, espionage, and one of the world’s best vil-lains to date.”

With the help of Japan, Germany was also able to open World War II in the Pacific theatre which helped boost exposure as well as sales, making it the most popular world war to date. The last World War really climaxed with a bang, and we want to make sure that the final installment leaves the same lasting impression. Germany doesn’t want to make the same mistake as Back To The Future or Mass Effect. It has been re-ported that Germany is collaborating with video game developer Valve on the last in-stallment of the trilogy.

But how much waiting is too much? Can other countries fill the void left by an unin-spired Germany? In the time since World War II came out, America and the USSR at-tempted their own spin-off series popularly called The Cold War which, while attract-ing audiences everywhere, was ultimately panned by critics for neither including the entire world nor actually involving warfare at any point.

Since a war with China would deprive Americans of the cheap, fast, easy to ig-nore, slave-like labour that is essentially the backbone of modern US comfort, and since most of America’s wars since The Cold War have essentially been pounding small, desert countries into submission, it seems unlikely that the Yanks will be the ones to finish the trilogy.

“I think Germany should take just as much time as they need,” said Australia when asked for comment. “Who knows what crazy things they have planned. Maybe this time the Germans will be the good guys and the Americans will be the bad guys?”

Critics thus far still have not come to a general consensus about how the third in-stallment of the trilogy will manifest itself or when, but everyone can agree that in or-der to meet fan expectations after a hiatus this long, Germany will either have to go big or go home.

Study: Inside of Your Upper Lip Feels Like a Vagina

You’re probably feeling it with your tongue right now

Russell D. Jimmies
Toike Oike Oral Performer

AFTER YEARS OF EXTENSIVE RESEARCH AND clinical study, a team of scientists from Johns Hopkins University have concluded that the upper part of the inside of the mouth is virtually indistin-guishable from a vagina.

The findings, which were published in the American Medical Journal earlier this week, also concluded that “you’re likely sticking your tongue into your upper lip area right now as you read this, trying to subconsciously figure out if it really does feel like a vagina.”

For the last few decades, doctors have struggled to find a part of the human body which accurately approximates the strange, wet, fleshy, floppy skin of the inside of the upper lip. Now thanks to advancements in modern medical science, researchers have finally been able to provide an answer.

“Our experimental data adheres to the most rigorous standards of scientific experimentation,” confirmed study lead Dr. Morgan Copewell. “Our experimenters conducted extensive tongue testing on over 300 vaginas and upper lip areas to confirm

Local Ambulance Sets Natural Selection Back 400 Years

33% more children expected to die within the next decade and climbing

G. R. Beck
Toike Oike Darwin Award Winner

AFTER 15 YEARS OF SERVICE, THE EMS DIVISION 6 Vehicle #18 Ambulance celebrated it's destruction of 400 years of hard work by natural selection just last month.

From 27 year old Kati Goodman who thought she was still young enough to do one shot for every year on her birthday to 19 year old Chad Tenorman whose recent binge of parkour videos on YouTube made the distance between two balconies seem just close enough, young adults across Toronto whose decision-making genes would be better left in the ground will now be free to reproduce their mistakes in the form of children thanks to 15 years of service by EMS Ambulance #18.

"I'm thinking about naming my kid YOLO," claimed a fractured, wounded, bed-ridden Chad Tenorman when asked if he was planning on adjusting his decision-making skills before becoming a father.

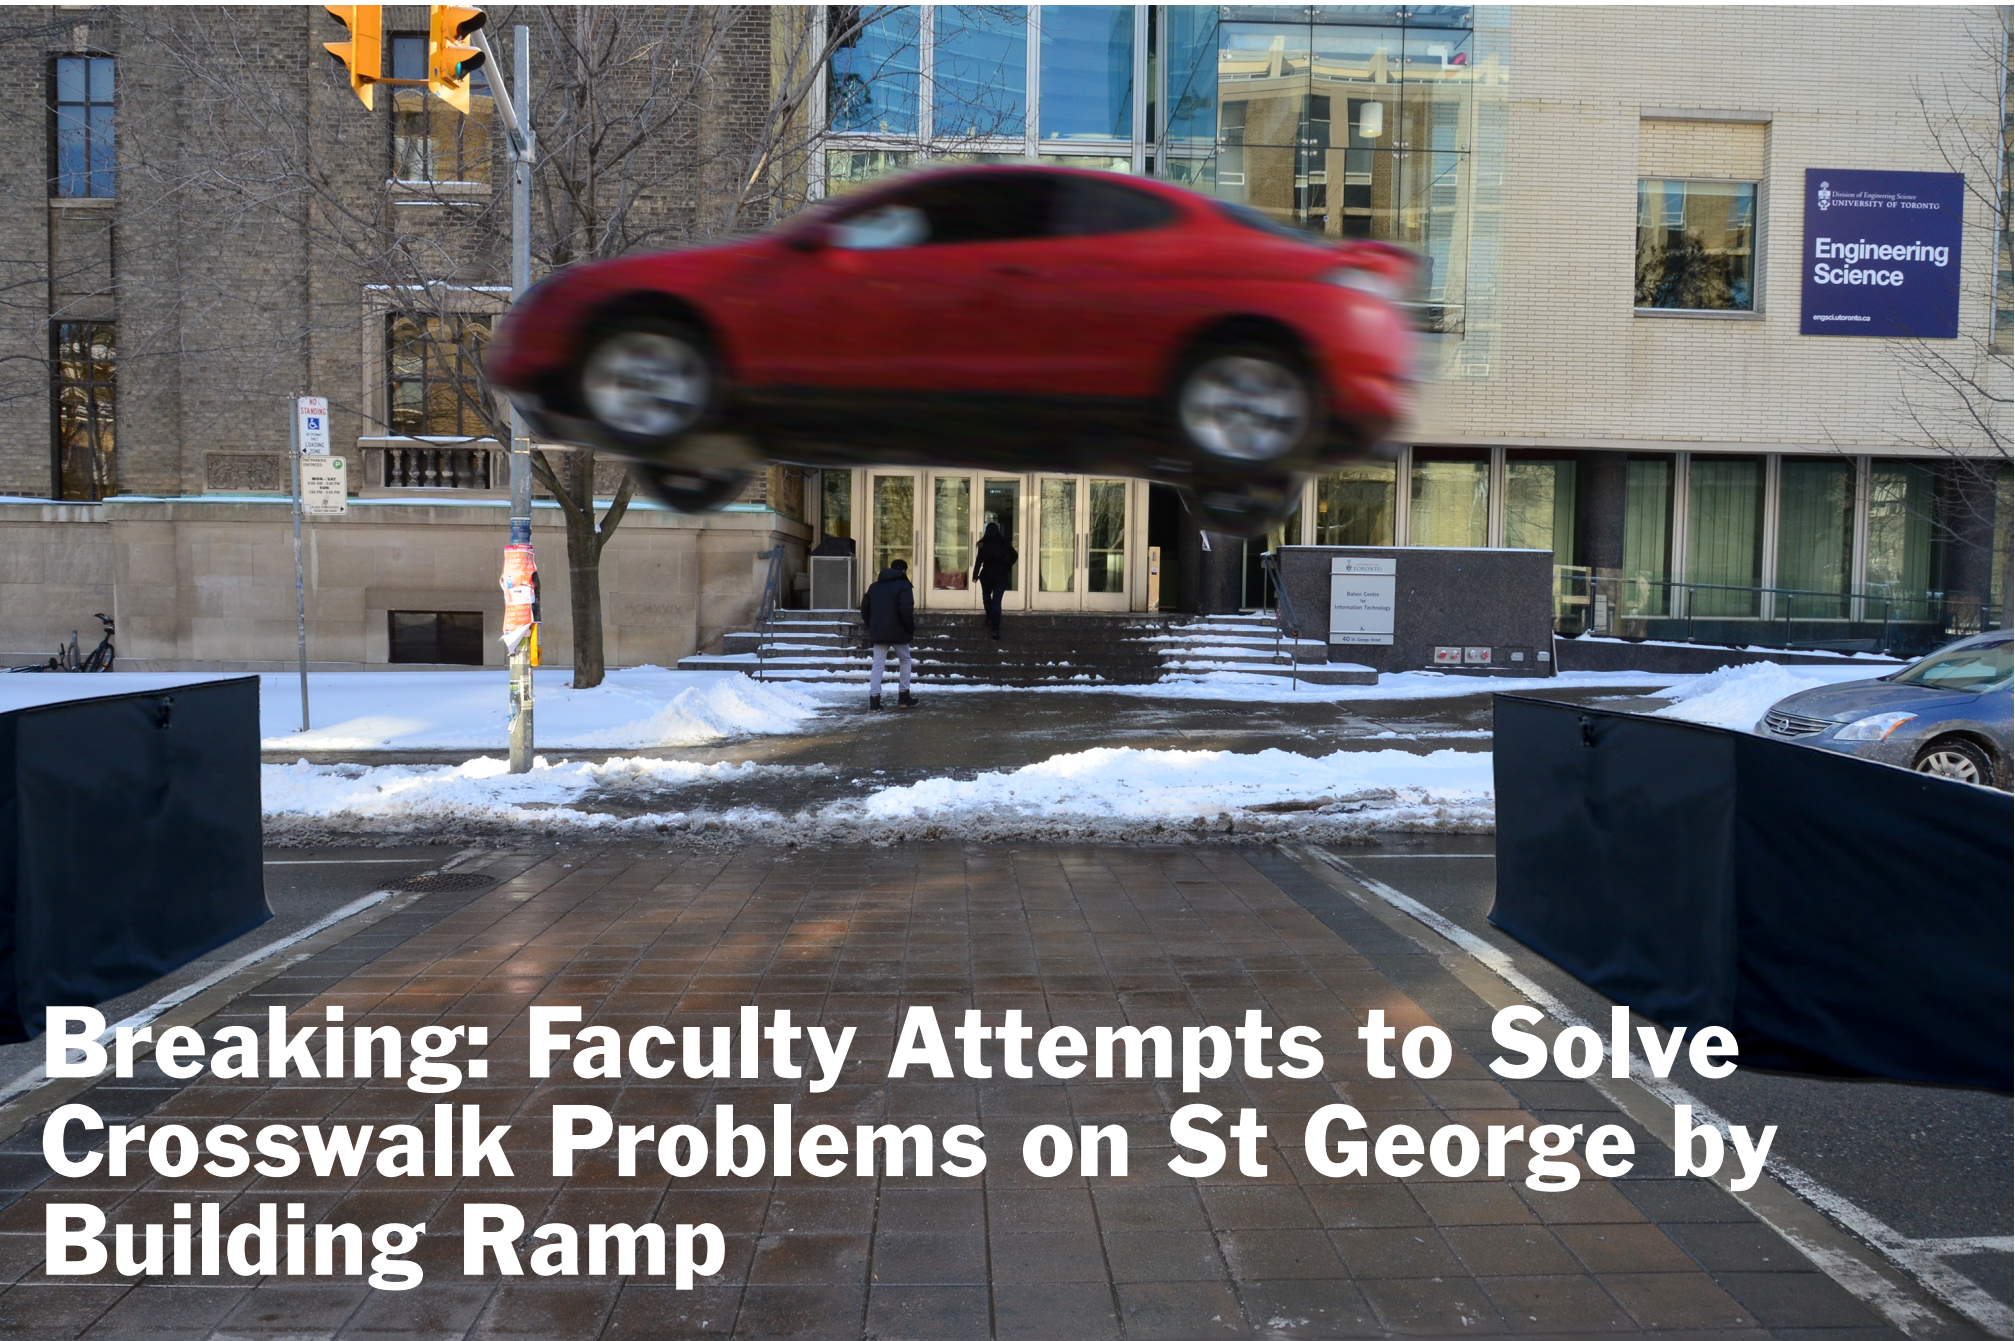

"That way my child will always know you only get one life, and the best way to spend that time is to make as many risky, potentially life-altering choices as possible. It's something they try to teach kids not to do in school, you know, so they become sheep, but I'm going to try as hard as I can to make sure that doesn't happen."

While local and federal government both uphold that each human being, no matter how devoid of common sense, deserves the right to create and personally educate as many children as they desire, the amount of natural selection reversed in the process is staggering, remarks Anthropologist Dr. Harold Koffe.

"Most people don't realize how long it took humans to naturally breed themselves off of a life-threatening bad habit," described Koffe. "400 years ago, when tall buildings started being built in close proximity to each other for the first time, thousands and thousands of humans across Europe died trying to jump from one to another. Having the good sense to know you're not good enough at parkour to jump buildings is something we today take for granted, but it took hundreds of years of breeding to get here."

"Thank God all this hospital stuff is free," concluded Chad. "There's no way my job playing guitar for spare change on Queen St. would have ever paid for all this life-saving medical equipment. That's just the government's fault though, they're the reason us artists never make as much as those sleazy doctors."

Breaking: Faculty Attempts to Solve Crosswalk Problems on St George by Building Ramp

This winter, Ontarians have had to endure a seemingly endless onslaught of ice phishing. To date, 250 locals have fallen victim to ice phishing, with 150 of those cases coming from determined phishing enthusiasts on UofT's very own Front Campus.

The practice involves sending mass emails instructing victims to arrive at specific coordinates at a specific time in order to collect a reward of some sort. Perpetrators set up camp on the ice and wait, laptops poised, in order to strike and kill their prey.

The practice, which originally was not popular at UofT, has been gathering fans ever since the winter break began. Police are on the lookout for instigators of ice phishing, and encourage anybody with information about these dangerous individuals to contact them.

General Motors to add “Check Privilege” Light to all White Vehicles

Barbados Slim
Toike Oike Equity Advisor

General Motors became warriors for social justice last week, after announcing their intentions to place ‘check privilege’ warning lights on all white-colored vehicles in their lineup, which will flash brightly on the dashboard when driver privilege reaches unsafe levels. “As our company moves forward, we realize that this is a safety feature just as critical as any other,” said GM spokesman Andrew Hawkins. “It’s right up there with lights like ‘check oil,’ ‘check engine,’ and ‘check brakes’.

Most people are unaware of the dangers of an unchecked privilege,” he went on to say. “I drive a white car, and I always get my privilege checked at least twice a month.” GM has also stated their overall goal is to encourage white car driving customers to be aware the inherent advantages they enjoy thanks to their car colour, and violently hate themselves for it.

Canadian Navy Buys Second Boat

Goat
Toike Oike Party Animal

The Royal Canadian Navy announced in a press release that, after one hundred and four years of service, they have finally purchased a second vessel. The Navy had reportedly been “getting by with just the one,” until quite recently, when the decision was made to commission a second ship.

“The fact that we have operated thus far on just one warship is a testament to Canadian ingenuity,” said Captain Wilson of the R.C.N. “That being said, this new vessel could not have come at a better time. We now have the resources needed to simultaneously defend both our east and west coasts.”

The acquisition, however, was not without contro-

Large Men Play Game on Field, People Get Angry

Masses of people assembled at a venue yesterday to watch two groups of burly men run around on a field performing physical actions to win a game. Even larger numbers of fans viewed the event on television. The match brought forth strong reactions from the crowd, many of whom were extremely irritated.

“Very disappointed with the outcome,” said one viewer. “I’m experiencing a great amount of tribalistic hatred towards the fans of the team I wasn’t cheering for.” This viewer is one of many, and he claims that being part of a such a large group makes him feel more justified in his opinions.

Given the quantity of people who apparently care about what happened, and the yearly salaries of the competitors (both similarly large figures), it has been assumed by the media that the event is worth covering. As such, this article has been written for the benefit of anyone who did not see the match, and broadcasters will discuss the specifics on various news networks later tonight. Something something something, hoping to improve in the rest of the season.

Royal Heir Enters Chrysalis in Preparation for Life as Monarch

The British Royal family stepped into the limelight once again to announce that the infant Prince George of Cambridge has entered his pupal stage of development. The child climbed onto a chandelier and encased himself in Venetian silk early last week.

Pundits have disparaged the eleven-month-old’s overdue transformation, though loyal supporters maintain that even Queen Victoria spent upwards of a year moulting and feeding on leaves from the Royal Botanic Gardens in her youth. The House of Windsor has seen larval stages as long as sixteen months, and a quick metamorphosis is often associated with the stability of the Empire.

The pupal Prince is expected to lay dormant for several weeks before emerging, making only occasional noises to ward off predators like the French. He will then unfurl the Union Jack markings on his wings for the first time, ready to lead the Commonwealth as a young monarch butterfly.

First Year Psychology Student Logs off Facebook

What was once thought to be impossible has been done. As of yesterday at 9:03 PM on in a University of Toronto residence, first year psychology student, Richy Kuntz, logged off his Facebook.

“I couldn’t believe it,” says his roommate. “One moment, I’m sitting there browsing Pinterest, everything is normal. All of sudden, I look over, and Kuntz has logged out of Facebook!”

“I believe Facebook was causing barbiturate dependence,” says Kuntz, who clearly understands absolutely nothing about psychology. “It was time to free my mind of useless details about people’s lives whom I have no interest in. I was spending too long “liking” photos to help beat cancer, sharing photos to show that I disliked Justin Bieber, and checking who my ex-girlfriend was seeing. It’s time to start being productive. Tonight, I start that essay. Tomorrow, I hit the gym.”

Kuntz’s roommate reported he was back on Facebook 40 minutes later, liking old photos of his ex-girlfriend.

Oil Discovered in Greece

“Olive oil!” representatives frantically scream while US Air Force drones fly overhead

Kanye Lingis
Toike Oike Democracy Supplier

THOUSANDS OF AMERICAN TROOPS WERE deployed earlier this week following Greece’s announcement of their discovery of large oil reserves.

The reserve was reportedly discovered in the cellar of President Karolos Papoulias’ country estate last Tuesday following his family’s retreat. They were supposedly cooking a dinner for some extended family when they realized that they were out of olive oil. When Papoulias visited the cellar to look for some more, he found his country’s long lost reserve of olive oil.

The next morning media across the country lit up with excitement over anticipation over the new masses of delicious home-cooked food they could now make. Unfortunately as the news made its way across the Atlantic, US officials failed to understand that the oil discovered in Greece was simply a cooking oil easily obtained from olives.

As soon as American politicians heard about the discovery, all armed forces were removed from Afghanistan and other areas of the Middle East and relocated to Greece. The country was immediately turned into a bloody warzone under the supposed purpose of “saving Greece’s economy.”

When questioned about the military occupation, US secretary of defense Chuck Hagel responded by stating that “If Greece’s economy is not saved, terrorism will erupt and our children will be in danger. We need to protect the American way of life.”

American representatives have yet to respond to Greek politicians’ emails which explain the confusion, and everyone is very sure that they have absolutely no intention to do so.

“These people, they’re living in horrible, harsh conditions that they don’t even understand! We, as Americans, know exactly what the local Greek population wants and needs, and so we, as Americans, retain the right to completely destroy their entire country in search of oil,” said one anonymous source in the CIA.

To date, drone strikes have obliterated fifteen sites of historical import in Greece, and American soldiers have stolen upward of 1000 gallons of olive oil from locals. American forces are not expected to understand exactly where they went wrong for another fifty years.

9 Arrested After Police Bust Speed Dating Event, 1 On the Run

Jordan Miles
Toike Oike Drug Addict

TORONTO POLICE ARRESTED NINE RESIDENTS LAST night after receiving an anonymous tip reported “a lot of strangely affectionate yelling” coming from a house in downtown Toronto. Upon arrival, police found exactly this: 10 local residents dating, high on speed. According to neighbours, what is called ‘speed dating’ is a recent fad in the neighbourhood, where locals will meet, get high on speed, and attempt to have a romantic date.

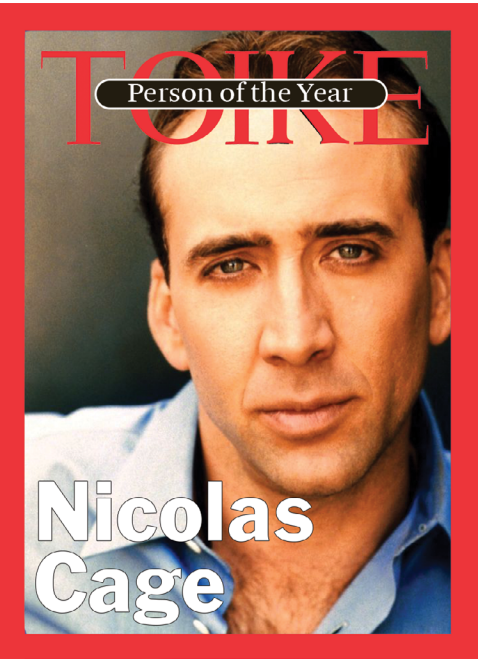

“We found them playing rock band, but all the instruments were broken,” said one police officer. “It was a pretty strange sight”, said another one of the reporting officers. “One of the participants was running naked on a treadmill while eating a Fruit Roll Up for no apparent reason. That was the one that got away.”

Residents say that some of these ‘speed dating’ events have been successful, but relationships that are produced are usually ended when one of the people sells their partner’s kidney for more amphetamines.

“I started Speed Dating a few weeks after my ex dumped me”, says a local resident, who has chosen to remain anonymous. “It’s a really great experience. It kinda feels like a whirlwind, and when it’s all done, you just want to do it over and over and over again”, claims our source. “My favourite part is that you get to meet a lot of new people - especially when the speed causes temporary acute schizophrenia. Best of all, sometimes you will just wake up with no clothes on wondering what the hell happened - but you can be certain you had a great time doing it.”

Police urge locals to report any suspicious activity immediately, and to be on the lookout for any other potential speed daters. “Still,” says chief of police, “it will never be as weird as that report we got about that couple going on that blind date.”

Persons of the Year

A man of class, 2Chainz takes pleasure in the simplicities in life. He has inspired millions with his poetry detailing how all he wants for his birfday is a big booty ho. He wears two chains. Do we really need to say more?

Goat

Nnnaaaaa aa aaa aaa! Goat is the very definition of an unsung hero. Goat holds a special place among the Toike's senior writers and in the hearts of children everywhere. Goat is a real party animal, but what most people don't know is that he was also awarded the Distinguished Service Medal for his efforts in the war. No other goat is such a keen wit, charitable soul, or tender lover. Goat just marches to the bleat of his own drum. Goat.

Kim Jong Un

The Supreme Leader who lights the stars should of course be one of the Persons of the Year. He has been our person of every year because he created the very ground we walk on. He is also known for inventing golf, cheeseburgers, and the high-five. We could not be happier than to pledge our gratitude to our Supreme Leader for letting us work our fingers to the bone in his name.

Mauricio Curbelo

Basically this guy is the man. He is the president of the Engineering Society. He loves cats AND dogs. He is known for telling homeless people and "deaf" people to get out of the Pit and for being mostly beloved by all faculty members. Loved and hated for general UTSU mischief and ex-external shenanigans. Mauricio is best know for quotes such as "HUEHU-EHUE" and "lololololol."

Toike Man

Toike man is always there for you. Toike Man is responsible for every chuckle on campus and every dissatisfied groan from the UTSU. Known as the prime shit-disturber at U of T, Toike Man is the driving force of all creativity. Without the Toike, we would be nothing.

Vladimir Putin

There are few who could stick to their literal and metaphorical guns under the pressure that Putin has been subjected to these past months by his international counterparts. Many would let slip their oppressive social and foreign policy, but Putin stands as an inspiration to all national leaders who have held their country's politics in an icy grip for more than a decade. Most recently known best for his attempts to go for the gold in world domination, this ex-KGB agent manages to look candid in numerous half-naked photoshoots even while stepping on foreigners' throats.

Rob Ford

A hero to many, Rob Ford is the Mayor Toronto never needed, he is the the glue this city needed to fix its wide gaping cracks. His Jamaican accent won over the hearts of millions and let all the peoples of Toronto know that everyone is part of his big joke. His sweaty red face will lead Toronto to a new golden age of subways.

The Colour Blue

Whilst there has been much controversy over this wavelength among the colour blind community, Blue has continued to revolutionize the way we see things. Have you seen the sky lately? That shit's super great. Also Blue is arguably the best flavour of candy, if candy couldn't taste Blue what would it taste like? Card-board. Thats what. Respect Blue.

That Douchebag in the BMW

You first noticed him last week when he cut you off on your way to work. Then you saw him again honking his horn at a frail senior citizen trying her best to cross the street at an appropriate speed. He takes pride in the fact that the only thing going for him is the fact that he saved up enough money to lease a BMW and therefore thinks he can be an entitled asshole. We'd love to get his name just so we can name our first children after him, assuming we survive long enough to reproduce with him on the road. What a guy.

Major Life Epiphany Occurs During Six Hour Skrillex Concert

Shelley B. Tagoff
Toike Oike Bangaragnarok

AFTER ATTENDING A RECORD-BREAKING 6-HOUR long concert by electronic maven Skrillex, Selkirk resident Jonathan “Squeaky” Deaner is claiming the event has left him permanently changed. The concert, which included repeat performances of each of Skrillex’s three radio hits and a 170 minute improvisational MacBook solo, left Deaner in a catatonic state for three days. Under the care of Dr. Lonny Hangmell, Deaner was brought out of catatonia by a steady intravenous stream of adrenaline and smooth jazz. Once he had fully awoken, Deaner described his experience as “pretty fucked up”. He recounted to our interviewer, “Around hour five of the show, I felt my skin turn into wood, and then I was turned into, like, a cello? And Skrillex grabbed me by the neck and just smashed me into the stage, but I was like, every cello, and being smashed all through space and time, you know? And then I understood what Skrillex was about and what the universe was about, and I was just like, ‘whoa’. I also saw a goat.” Deaner then proclaimed himself the “Messiah of the Millennials” and bolted from the interview room, screaming “Wub is the opiate of the masses”. The Toike Oike was not able to obtain any further statements from Mr. Deaner.

Dr. Hangmell explained to the Toike that over-exposure to bass likely contributed to Deaner’s epiphany. Hangmell explains “Jonathan had fiercely defended his sub-woofer-adjacent spot throughout the concert and experienced a near-lethal amount of vibration. The onslaught of sub-100Hz frequencies had a synchronistic effect on Jonathan’s brain waves, which ultimately rearranged his thought patterns. A visualization of the waves appears to mimic the waveform of a dial-up modem, which causes nearby channels to experience rather obnoxious electronic noise. Skrillex’s contribution to this transformation is undeniable.”

Selkirk residents say that Deaner has now taken up residence in a local park, where he preaches the “Word of the Wub” and has gained a small following. Adherents of Deaner say that he is amassing a large collection of speakers and other audio equipment for the forthcoming “BangaRagnarok”, which Deaner himself promises to instigate. “He hopes to share his revelations with the entire country by replicating his experience for the public,” said Don Raggio, a Selkirk city official and fan of Blue Rodeo.

He continued, barely suppressing laughter, “I doubt he’ll succeed, though. Skrillex is a musician of such skill and originality that even a true Skriller like Jonathan can’t mimic it.” Raggio then dissolved into fits of giggles, raised a boombox to his shoulder, blasted “Hasn’t Hit Me Yet” and headed to the centre of Deaner’s park assembly. This author did not remain to see what ensued.

Vending Machines to Start Charging Sales Tax

Connie Cusshan
Toike Oike Fuzzy Peach

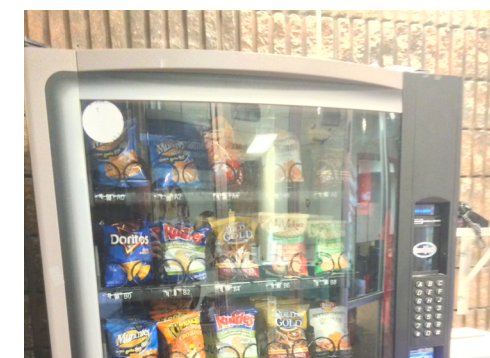

ANEW BILL WAS PASSED IN THE HOUSE OF Commons today declaring that as of March 31st, all vending machines are going to start charging sales tax. Similar to how it works in stores, the tax will not be included on the advertized price but will only be charged when you try to fucking pay for it.

The new mandate law states that correct change must first be entered into the machine. It will then start to vend but then the rotating spirals of fate keeping you from your wonderful high calorie snack, will suddenly stop. Then the fucking machine won’t work until you pay the unlabelled taxes, after you calculate 13% in your head then round to the nearest nickle before it finishes vending, and you are rewarded with victory in the form of your beautiful long awaited snack (that will probably give you diabetes).

The Conservative party have put out a statement to further clarify their intentions behind doing this. “Well everybody already knows that we like watching Canadians suffer, we’re the government it’s kinda what we do. Anyways, so the other day Jim Flaherty was saying in the caucus meeting, ‘you know what’s the worst, when you wanna buy something that costs 5 bucks, but you can’t use a fiver because it actually costs five fucking sixty-five. Five mother fucking sixty-five...wouldn’t it be hilarious if we could make that happen more often?’ So yeah we figured it would be a great way to pad the coffers.”

Once the new law is in effect, Canadians can expect a 20% longer wait time at vending machines as well as that little voice in the back of your head telling you to murder everyone around you getting a little bit louder in the coming months.

North Korea Buys Foursquare Check-ins made mandatory

Jack Brittanian
Toike Oike Apprentice Dictator

SUPREME LEADER KIM JONG UN ANNOUNCED last week his government’s acquisition of the Foursquare mobile app which is now both endorsed and enforced throughout North Korea. The new Korean version of the app works mostly like its Western counterpart except instead of becoming the Mayor of your favourite hangout spot you can become the Supreme Leader. Anyone who is found to do so will receive immediate military escort off the premises followed by reconditioning.

Reports indicate that the app has been a huge success, with some of the most popular check-in locations being “Factory” and “Where we are keeping your children.” Kim Jong Un has also announced plans to expand the app’s market to South Korea by the end of the year, however reports indicate he will merely threaten to perform this expansion for several years for the sole purpose of aggravating South Korea.

The Supreme Leader is very pleased with his pet project, noting that when he invented mobile devices this was really what he had in mind. In a commendable show of modesty, the Supreme Leader ended his announcement by crediting the West with inspiring him to make police states hip and trendy again. Now the Korean people can feel safe knowing that their government can monitor their actions at all times.

TIME Magazine to Consider a Woman as Person of the Year

Kate Middleton
Toike Oike Social Expert

TIME MAGAZINE EDITOR JAMES MacDougall found himself in the midst of great controversy last week when, for the very first time, TIME magazine actually considered honouring a woman with the title of Person of the Year.

“It was a close one,” said Thomas O’Malley, one of TIME’s staff writers. “I mean we very nearly considered a woman. By the time we got down to serious discussion we had abandoned that idea, of course. I can’t imagine the sort of anarchy that would have reigned had we actually suggested a woman in the closed-door discussions regarding the title.”

Thankfully, TIME ultimately settled upon a pretty well known guy who, while having done something noteworthy and impressive, really hadn’t done anything so impressive as to title him The Best Of Humanity 2013. This choice has been heralded by critics as much more rational.

Worryingly, TIME isn’t the only media platform to consider recognizing the achievements of women this year. The American Academy of Motion Pictures, for example, briefly considered selecting a woman to receive Best Director before quickly coming to their senses and choosing a white guy instead. Meanwhile, rates of sandwich jokes being made in classes taught by female professors are at a troubling low of only ten per minute.

“The world wants to see more men in positions of power,” said Harvard psychology professor Dr. Damien Hall. “Seeing women with power makes us uncomfortable. It’s just too close to acknowledging that women make meaningful contributions to all spheres of our society, and do so having dealt with countless years of gender oppression. There is nothing more emasculating than a woman achieving something.”

Said Toronto man Joseph McHale, “If women start seeing the value they have as members of society, they might start doing things like respecting themselves and growing confident in their intellect and abilities. As a man, that threatens me. Every achievement made by a woman that is recognized is just another harsh blow in the battle to keep women in their place.”

Thankfully, there is hope. While rates of suggestions that women’s contributions to the fields of science and the arts are on the rise, rates of that acknowledgement actually happening remain as low as ever. Some ridiculous critics, however, seem to think this is a bad thing. “This is entirely sexist,” said Alessandra DeSantos, a professor of international affairs at McGill University. “The fact that women – who lately are graduating in higher numbers than men from academic institutions – are still seen as second-class citizens in academia is pathetic, and a shameful reflection of the state of academia today.”

Officials from TIME magazine have released statements claiming that the magazine isn’t sexist by nature, but that women simply aren’t intelligent or impressive enough to ever be considered good enough to be their Person of the Year. The statement then went on to suggest that women should “stop kidding themselves and just settle down.”

Said Hilary Clinton, “Are you fucking kidding me?”

Systematic Review of Literature Pertaining to Pleasure and Safety in Anal Sex

Part of the Engineering Required Reading Curriculum

Shelley B. Tagloff
Toike Oike Anal Performer

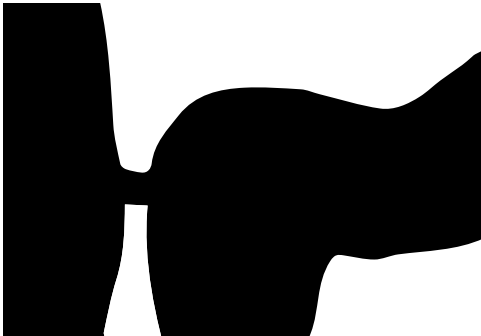

Background:

The practice of consensual anal sex has become considerably less taboo since the founding of the School of Practical Science at the University of Toronto, now known as the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering. However, recent anecdotal evidence suggests that the literature used to instruct undergraduate students in Engineering has not changed to reflect this societal revelation, to the detriment of the undergraduate population and society as a whole.

To wit, Engineers who pursue a career in the public eye will be woefully undereducated in the pursuit of pleasure and safe engagement in sodomy. In the author’s own experience at the University of Toronto, 68% of prescribed textbooks remain completely unused by both students and faculty, despite their high pricetags. It is henceforth asserted that increasing the coverage of anal sex instruction in said textbooks would improve not only the value of the textbooks, but the university experience as a whole.

Methodology:

1. Engage in copious amounts of anal sex to build a first-hand knowledge base. Experimentation design will experiment with block combinations of the following independent Variables: leg splay at 15deg, 45deg, 90deg, 135deg, and 180deg; sphincter clench pressure at 0.4, 0.7, 1, 2, and 6 atmospheres; and insertion length at 2cm, 5cm, 18cm, 30cm, and 50cm.

2. Conduct a systematic review of each of the core engineering textbooks to assess the degree to which anal sex is discussed.

3. Engage in post-review anal sex for validation of initial findings.

Results:

Block experiment yielded best anal sex at levels 15deg leg splay, 202.6kPa sphincter pressure, and 18cm phallus insertion. The literature review yielded three tiers of anal sex comprehensiveness: Null, Medium, and Full-On Explicit.

The materials for Materials Science and Electrical and Computer Engineering streams contained no coverage of anal sex or its derivatives, which aligned with the author’s expectations that students in these disciplines don’t know how to have a good time.

Mechanical and Chemical Engineering contained partial coverage of anal sex essentials, as the fine-motor skills developed through laboratory work are directly applicable to the act of manoeuvring a blunt object into a rectum.

Civil Engineering, Engineering Science, and Industrial Engineering literature contained the most explicit instruction on anal sex, but not for the same reasons. Civil and EngSci cover the subject of anal sex in depth in order to instruct the students on how to get the most enjoyment and fewest complications out of anal sex (most prevalent during examination seasons). Conversely, Industrial Engineering covers anal sex as a means of giving students something to do when they are finished “fucking the dog” (See Hymn, Godiva’s: Verse 28).

Conclusion:

Stage 3, validation of results, confirmed that anal sex is indeed awesome. It is the duty of the University of Toronto to introduce all future engineers to the joys of anal penetration, lest as a faculty we fall behind expert sodomites from York, Ryerson, and MacMaster.

The author recommends that all disciplines incorporate detailed chapters on the enjoyment of safe and productive sodomy, in order to make the undergraduate experience more pleasurable and smooth for all students.

Russia to Bring Back Medieval Witch Hunts

Archaic human rights policies to be updated

Pete Nisse
Toike Oike Human Rights Specialist

WITH THE OLYMPICS FINISHED, RUSSIA HAS finally buckled to international pressure to update their human rights stance. During a private press conference, President Vladimir Putin announced:

“We been experiencing a tremendous flow of recommendations to update our archaic human rights policies, and that’s exactly what we are going to do, starting with reimplementing witch hunts. Our increasing number of witches concerns us as it is very unnatural.”

The witch hunt craze of the 16th and 17th centuries never regained popularity as a cultural phenomenon, nor has any concrete proof ever been offered to support the existence of witches, however Putin has made it clear that he fears Russia’s future is threatened by witches, and a series of new legislation that has recently been passed in Russia reflects these fears.

While the international community has reacted with outrage to these most recent developments to Russia’s legal code, representatives of Putin’s government assure the press that these measures have been put in place to ensure the continued sanctity of family values in Russia.

Putin acknowledged that completely exterminating all of the witches in Russia was going to be a huge undertaking for the Russian government though he declared that they had come up with a foolproof plan, saying: “We’ve learned from our previous mistakes and we are better prepared than we have ever been.”

The plan bears many similarities to its ancestral forebear the Salem witch hunts. Given the success of the Salem witch hunts, it seems to be quite a good call by the Russian government. However critics have been quick to note that witches must have surely come up clever disguise methods to avoid being caught. These critics have since been silenced.

During the press conference a pamphlet detailing how to identify a witch and what to do if you identify a witch was passed out. According to the pamphlet witches love to dress in the latest style. The pamphlet goes on to say:

“Approach the suspected witch and complement them on their fabulous clothes, this will cause them much elation. Then, ask where they bought their outfit. While the suspected witch is telling you, kick them in the knee. If the suspected witch cries out in pain, then it is almost certain they are a witch: no true Russian can feel pain. Subdue the witch and call the anti-witch hotline (705-794-4131) and our inquisitors will be on the scene shortly to take the witch away for further questioning.” To date, Russian police have arrested approximately 10 000 individuals for witchcraft.

Critics were once again quick to mention that they too enjoyed wearing fabulous clothes, but were not witches, and that everyone feels pain. They have since been taken away by the Russian inquisition because they are quite obviously witches.

Arrests for acts of sorcery have been on the rise since last week, when Putin published a paper explaining exactly how to identify a witch and what constitutes witch activity. The damning list includes wearing any colour that appears in the rainbow, making eye contact with anyone of the same sex in public, associating with black cats, associating with cats that aren’t black, being female, having an opinion, and consorting with the Devil.

The paper then goes into further detail on how the witches would be tried. Because witches are so sneaky, the suspected witch must go through a rigorous trial before it can be determined with 100% certainty that they are / are not a witch. Some of these trials include:

1. Trial by smell: A witch’s favourite smell is that of carbon monoxide. If the suspected witch can inhale 1 litre carbon monoxide, it is clear they are a witch.
2. Trial by weight: Since witches burn, they must be made of wood. If they are made of wood, that means that they can float. Ducks also float on water, therefore if the suspected witch is of equal or greater weight than a duck, they must be a witch.
3. Trial by fire: Unlike regular humans, witches are made of wood. This means that a witch will burn whereas a regular human will not. To test the witchiness of a suspected witch, tie them to a stake and light it on fire. If the suspected witch burns, then they are obviously a witch.

This plan has been met with nothing but positive feedback, which is unsurprising given that all critics have silencela jljaga.a gja
This plan is 100% going to work. Go Russia.

Facebook Likes Actually Cure Cancer

Harry T. Stickle
Toike Oike Social Media-rologist

TWELVE YEAR-OLD BOY JOHNSON UJJAINWALA from Kansas City, Missouri woke up to a miracle yesterday morning. Diagnosed with throat cancer earlier this year, young Johnson’s future was looking bleak, and the hundreds of thousands of dollars in medical bills were beginning put his family into financial ruin. Miraculously, all of that changed yesterday when the Ujjainwalas woke up to find a Facebook campaign anonymously submitted for Johnson, stating: “I will be cancer-free if I receive 1,000,000 Facebook likes.”

At first the post received no attention due to being thought “fake and unrealistic.” However, it received thousands of likes in a few hours when networks of well-meaning but naive fourteen-year-olds found it.

Two days later, when 1 million likes were finally reached, Ujjainwala was miraculously cured.

Medical professionals have cautioned that this is likely a coincidence, but Facebook has been quick to seize upon the news.

“Facebook is pleased to announce that its newest feature Likes to Live™ has achieved success,” claimed a press release issued by Facebook earlier today. “This program has been secretly in development for two years, and we are so happy to have made a difference in the life of Johnson Ujjainwala, whom we selected as our pilot test subject. It’s totally scientific.”

“I really, really doubt that,” said Dr. Jane Stephenson. “That is impossible. Genuinely impossible.”

“It’s legit,” Facebook representatives volleyed back. “100% true. We spent ages developing this. Trust us, this is the future of medicine.”

Critics, however, remain unconvinced. “Please do not trust in Facebook to cure you of any terminal illnesses,” Dr. Stephenson went on to say. “Please. It will not work.”

While Facebook and the entire medical field bicker, however, one thing remains certain: The Ujjainwala family isn’t complaining.

“We’re definitely taking this opportunity to celebrate,” Johnson’s father told the press this afternoon. “And hey, maybe I’ll finally download Instagram. Maybe this social media thing does have real uses.”

Recent findings say that auto-clickers to like the post don’t work as intended, and instead, they kill the patient immediately.

American Citizen Locates US on Map

Mark G. Spaught
Toike Oike Geography Expert

LEONARD BRYCE, A TEENAGER FROM NORTH Baltimore High, located the United States on a map last Thursday and in doing so was placed on the list of the most intelligent Americans alive today. “Few in America has shown this kind of intellectual prowess since that one guy in Oklahoma learned how to spell USA,” claims his high school geography teacher, who was unable to locate the US until Leonard showed him.

U.S. Secretary of Education Bart Huell commented, “We are currently in talks about funding this boy’s college education, to ensure he has a fair chance at attaining a PhD and perhaps even changing the world.” Upon finding out how much American college costs, Huell rescinded his statement.

This is indeed a new era for the US educational system. In addition to Leonard Bryce’s recent accomplishment, over 5 states have now legalized the use of letters in mathematics. Unfortunately, other states stay skeptical about this idea, as confirms Richard Hardison, a physics teacher from Alabama. “Letters in calculus? What’s next? Imaginary numbers?” Hardison commented in one particularly enlightening interview.

About three hundred and fifty million people live in the United States, but sadly only a third have access to decent high school education. Three quarters of the population has access to schools, but they are far below the international standards.

Some states, such as West Virginia and Arkansas, scored such a low average on standardized tests that the bureau of education had to inflate the scores and ban all non-integer numbers, which were considered “too confusing.”

Leonard Bryce currently lives in Maryland which is an advanced state in terms of education when compared to the other states, but research has found that it is really only international students that have been contributing to this reputation.

In light of this educational revolution, America’s youth have taken to viewing Leonard as a role model. Hope remains that in ten to fifteen years, the situation will improve, and that US citizens will learn the definition of the word ‘deficit’.

Government of Canada Approves Drive-Thru Washrooms

First Year Physiology Class Can’t Stop Laughing

Jack Britannia
Toike Oike Anatomy “Expert”

CONVOCATION HALL ERUPTED EARLIER this week when an entire first-year physiology lecture suddenly broke into a giggle fit. The muffled laughter of the 700 students reached an almost deafening height before the professor opted to end the lecture.

The lecture, which was the first one of the anatomy section of the course, reportedly consisted of a multitude of diagrams and pictures depicting the human body. These diagrams included multiple labels of body parts such as the testes, anus, breasts, sphincter, and the class favourite, wenis.

“I’m sorry,” said one student, covering his mouth, “It’s just... hah, oh man, the prof’s face, and the arrows were pointing— ahahah”. Other students were mostly unresponsive, insisting that they “can’t even”. The brouhaha carried on throughout the morning, disrupting subsequent classes until the students were cleared out by a fourth year lecture on the history of German grammar.

“I can’t believe this shit happens every year,” said Dr. Hopkins, the professor of the culpable class. “These students are supposed to be adults, yet every semester it’s like the lecture hall is filled with twelve-year-olds.” The Toike was unable to find out how Dr. Hopkins was able to put up with teaching the course for so long.

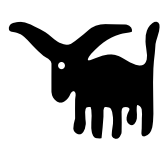

The faculty is considering changing the course’s structure, which currently focuses its first half on “The Talk” and the second half on looking at naughty pictures.
